Gays And Madison Avenue

A current article in the advertising magazine Adweek is entitled: "There's Still One Niche Market Advertisers Ignore". The gist of the article is that the advertising industry continues to violate sound business sense by shunning the gay and lesbian press.

The article, which unfortunately ignored lesbian demographics, cited studies showing that gay males' average household income is $55,430 compared to the national average of $32,144. It stated that we drink more name brand alcohol, travel more by air, charge more with credit cards and spend more on discretionary consumer goods than almost any other group.

Yet, the article went on, "In spite of a readership with healthy spending patterns and brand loyalty, gay publications have not had much luck convincing Madison Avenue to see gays as a niche market."

The author was not shy in blaming homophobia as the reason why advertisers don't support the gay press. "What most advertisers are afraid to admit," Adweek wrote, "is that gay magazines are not exactly the environment with which they want to be associated." Citing an extreme example—that the Trojan company refuses to advertise in magazines like Out Week or the Advocate—Adweek said that it's "particularly absurd that in this age of 'condom sense,' condom companies don't want to target gays."

It's not only absurd, it's extremely damaging as well. The gay press in all its diversity is the glue that holds much of our community together. It provides the space where issues are raised and debated, organizations and people gain valuable exposure, ideas get communicated, news gets disseminated, arts and creative endeavors get noted and reviewed. In a society that ignores or oppresses gay and lesbian activities, the gay press is vital in shaping our lives.

Yet without the support of mainstream advertisers, the gay press hangs by a precarious thread. The current threat to phone sex revenues underscores how vulnerable our publications are, how easily the presses could stop rolling.

This is not the case with any other significant minority press. Publications for Blacks, women and others are crammed with mainstream ads, despite the fact that their demographic profiles are often less affluent than ours.

Gays must realize that the products, services and businesses that draw millions of dollars from the gay and lesbian community each year have an obligation to recycle at least a tiny fraction of that money back into the community those businesses benefit from. Part of that should be in the form of contributions to our causes; part should surely be advertisements in the gay press, ads which would benefit the businesses as much as our community. If the situation is not remedied soon, we should begin to think of ways to flex our economic muscle in ways that advertisers won't be able to ignore.
Talk of the Town

As I'm sure you know, your "Secret Life of Malcolm Forbes" cover story (no. 38, Mar. 18) was the absolute talk of the town last week. At work, in bars and on the telephone, this nasty debate over your ethics only ended when your next cover story, "Gay Murder and Covenant House: The Secret Rules," hit the stands so that everyone (or at least everyone in my uncharacteristically homosexual accounting office) could talk about that instead.

But, getting back to the Forbes debate, I have now heard every angle, every reason for and against what you did. And, though reluctant about this sort of thing previously, I've decided it was right and good. Perhaps we must drag them all out of that damned closet! It doesn't really matter whether Forbes, for our own tastes, was a good role model or not. He was a powerful person, and it must be reported to the public that such individuals can also be homosexual, whether we think they are good representations of homosexuals or not. I also can't give a hoot about whether or not the public wants to learn that Forbes was gay. They have to hear it. And we must tell them.

You are a strong and powerful voice, OutWeek, and we need you.

Who Wants To Know?
Congratulations to Michelangelo Signorile for his article "The Other Side of Malcolm." Ever since I'd heard "rumors" that Malcolm Forbes was gay (about ten minutes after I moved to New York in 1983), I'd always wondered, "Who's he got to be afraid of?" He had more money, power and friends than just about anyone, yet he felt he had to stay in the closet. One still doesn't know whether to be angry with him for denying gays

Marching To A Different Model

You've got to be kidding. Malcolm Forbes as a role model for lesbian and gay youth? While you're at it, how about Roy Cohn? If anyone could afford to come out, it was Forbes. But fortunately for us, there are a few famous lesbians and gays for teenagers (and us all) to look up to, and they aren't self-hating, ego-tripping capitalist fools who spend more on their own birthday parties than it costs to buy a lifetime supply of AZT.

For example, Sgt. Miriam Ben-Shalom, who has battled the Army for the rights of all gay and lesbian people, and has done it openly, proudly and with dignity. In the same issue where you canonize Forbes, you print, "...one of the organizers of the rally said that as a boy he saw Ben-Shalom on the television news, and she was the first gay person besides himself he knew about. 'I always looked up to her... In an age when there are few heroes, she's my hero.'" As much as I am opposed to the military-industrial complex, here is a woman I can be proud to say is a hero of the lesbian and gay community. I can imagine arguing with her about the role of gays in a violent, patriarchal system like the Army without her saying, "Not so loud. Someone might hear." Forbes would just try to buy my silence for $100. His own silence cost us a lot more.

and lesbians a very powerful role model, or sad that, for everything he had, he denied himself an authentic life. Michelangelo’s article makes both these points clearly and cogently. And he is absolutely correct in saying ‘these facts must be recorded, that people must know.

What was so winning and wonderful about this self-proclaimed “capitalist tool”, who was actually not just a tool but a big capitalist himself? That he inherited lots of money just by being born, then proceeded to expand his riches by exploiting lots of workers in the many enterprises he owned? That he spent incredible sums of money on self-promotion and conspicuous consumption like the famous Tangiers birthday party, while millions in this country go hungry and homeless and AIDS research, despite his oh-so-generous donations, languishes?

This man was a leading proponent and beneficiary of a system—capitalism—that is built on, thrives on, depends on racism. I don’t call that wonderful. He annually celebrated the successes of the 500 biggest U.S. companies, every one of them, to varying extents, a union buster, every one of them anti-gay and sexist. I don’t find that winning.

That he was gay does not qualify him as a role model for our youth, any more than it does other slumebuckets like Roy Cohn or J. Edgar Hoover. There are plenty of brave, honorable, honest lesbians and gay men for our youth to look up to—not just fighters against AIDS, lesbian/gay oppression and racism—but for some reason the media, which are owned by people like Malcolm Forbes, don’t spotlight them. I wonder why.

Monkey Business

Thanks so much for your article and editorial on Malcolm Forbes. However, they caused me to get involved in several heated arguments this week.

It seems that some people still think that we should all engage in a conspiracy of silence when it comes to the private lives of famous people—but only if they’re gay! Anything else about famous people, even tragedies and things which can really damage or destroy careers if they become known, like alcoholism, drug abuse, spouse or child abuse, etc.—all these things can and do get written about famous people all the time. Nobody bats an eye. But say that a famous person is gay and wham! people start screaming privacy! confidentiality! What does that mean? That it’s worse to be gay than to be a child-abusing alcoholic? Apparently. And believe it or not, a lot of gay people seem to think so, too.

Another one of my favorite nonsense arguments is that OutWeek shouldn’t have brought Malcolm out because Malcolm didn’t want people to know he was gay. I love that one. It makes the supposition that, for example, Joan Crawford did want people to know she abused her children, or that Roseanne Barr does want people to know all about her nightmarish private life. The fact is that famous people make a very clear trade-off: they trade their privacy for fame, fortune and celebrity. Once they do, anything about them is fair game—divorce, private tragedy, infidelity, anything—except, apparently, homosexuality. And in any of those other things, it does not matter if they want to keep those secrets secret or not. If they're famous, essentially they have no secrets. Unless they're gay, in which case you in the press are just supposed to shut up!

I wish I could say that I'm amused by the hypocrisy of friends who have whole scenes of dialogue from Mommy Dearest memorized, but who then squeal with horror that Malcolm "didn't want his private life made public." You go figure.

The other line that gets me is: "I just don't care whether he was gay or not. I don't think the public wants to know."

Right, Mary. Don't look now, but biographies are the hottest ticket in publishing. "The public" can't get enough of every teensy, weensy detail of the private lives of everybody who's famous. Who they slept with, why, when, where, how. A whole industry is based on this.

But now I'm supposed to believe that in the case of gays, WE'RE JUST NOT INTERESTED AT ALL? Give me the proverbial break.

Keep up the great work.

Para-gone

I am shocked—yes, shocked and appalled that you would allow your magazine to sink to such a low level! I am referring, of course, to the article on "The Secret Gay Life of Malcolm Forbes"—the sleaziest piece of tabloid trash disguised as journalism I have ever encountered.

The man is dead, and no amount of rationalization can justify the ghoulish delight Michelangelo took in picking apart his bones.

As each and every one of us knows, the decision to come out of the closet or not is a painful and private one. For a man in Malcolm's position, it is a particularly difficult decision, and, if he chose to remain in the closet—that was his choice. Who are you to desecrate everything he built his life around? Who are you to humiliate his family and destroy the memories they might have had of him?

I am out of the closet. Good for me. So is Michelangelo. Good for him. Reading his weekly column—reading those vituperative vilifications of people who simply don't want the world to know who they sleep with—well, it's just evil. Frankly, there are people I don't want the world to know I slept with either.

Not every homosexual has to be a flag-waving, marching, card-carrying faggot. Maybe my view is antiquated—but I find all this Liz/Malcolm/Pat-bashing distasteful and shrill.

But back to the article.
After reading it and re-reading it, I am still dubious as to his reasons for writing it. If it was written to expose "the truth"—why, then, does he list blow by blow (literally) every sexual encounter Malcolm ever had, yet give the partners pseudonyms? Isn't that a little hypocritical? Who's hiding now?

Michelangelo has said to me in conversation that the gay community needs more heroes. What good, he wondered, did Malcolm's homosexuality do, if nobody knew about it? What good, though, does it do to drag someone from the closet, kicking and screaming, if they don't want to? Worse, how can you drag a corpse through the mud in the name of heroism?

Michelangelo also assured me that the article would be tastefully done. I might not be a paragon of good taste, but when has discussing someone's masturbatory habits been considered tasteful? Really, in the future, it might be wise to exercise a little restraint on your writers, especially ones who dive into slime with such shameless gusto.

Common Knowledge
What did Bing Crosby, Maurice Chevalier, Nelson Rockefeller, Joan Crawford, Dwight Eisenhower, Marilyn Monroe, Ricky Nelson, Alfred Hitchcock, Errol Flynn and Lyndon Johnson all have in common? All of them were "exposed" for some nasty secret immediately upon or shortly after their deaths. (Hitchcock was a peeping tom, LBJ stole an election, Bing beat his kids, Dwight had a mistress, etc., etc., etc.). Yet not one of those sometimes seedy, sometimes tragic revelations was greeted by anything resembling the howls of protest that greeted your Malcolm story. I don't recall anyone ever saying, "Why did the press have to print that?" or "We should respect the fact that they didn't want their secret known" or "What did they do to the press that they should be exposed?" Yet that's all I did hear after your Malcolm story. And mostly from fellow gays.

The rivers of self-loathing run deeper than I thought. I hope you keep fishing in those troubled waters.
Congratulations for having guts.

Forbes' Flaw
Your recent article decrying the hypocrisy of Malcolm Forbes' closeted life was flawed by a deep hypocrisy of its own: with only one exception, all of your sources of information about the "real" Forbes were identified only by pseudonymous first names. What are your sources (and OutWeek) afraid and/or ashamed of? Where is the pride and power in such a weak-kneed stance?

If we are to convince the rest of the population about our inherent legitimacy and rightful place in the world (i.e., the truth), then we're going to have to provide something more than the mere hearsay of a few Bobs and Freddies (not their real names).

Mean To Malcolm
Ya'll, what is your obsession with forcing people out of the closet? What someone does with their Dick or pussy in private is their own business. If Malcolm had wanted us to know what he did in bed, he would have told us. If I were a famous closeted person, I just might run deeper after that article. This thirst for labeling and categorizing people on the basis of sex Is presumptuous, narrow-minded, divisive and dangerous. Are you really trying to help us, or are you just selling magazines?
Phillips Van Zandt

Forbes Foibles
One who agrees with your condemnation of a much too-long predominant social atmosphere which has forced many (most?) gay men and lesbians to remain in the closet, should still be appalled at your suggestion that Malcolm Forbes was a "wonderful, winning person" who would have been one such "paragon" and "idol" had he been more open about his sexuality ("Outspoken", no. 38, Mar. 18).
To be sure, he was "winning" in the sense that he, had the prenatal foresight to choose rich parents...then parlayed inherited millions into more millions;...but, how? By choosing sides, as your accompanying article notes, with "some of the decade's most notorious homophobes" and by promoting "an even more reactionary line" in his magazine.
You almost completely ignore Forbes' political agenda, which he tried to make all the more palatable by the very P.R. which made him so "lovable" and "winning"; and you barely note that, in status and by deed, Forbes did not merely reinforce society's homophobia, but also in the name of "free enterprise" aggressively supported a wholly corrupt and non-productive war materials industry (socialism for the rich did not make him uncomfortable), as he fought against expanding medical care for the poor (or anyone else) and against related social programs, and opposed virtually every other political and social aim that OutWeek has so forcefully argued for. This was not a person to idolize.

Ultus Mess
It's fast becoming apparent that a new litmus test of liberation has emerged. It has to do with "outing" (hate that word, can't we think of a better one?) and how folks react to it.
Here's how it works. Almost everyone is against it at first. After all, we were all taught that privacy is paramount, and that's that. So when the subject comes up, almost everyone in the room is against forcing famous people out.
But there's usually one person in the room who's in favor of it, and a fight begins. If that one person is even remotely articulate, he or she musters the arguments...
In favor, and soon all sorts of folks are wavering. The arguments in favor, after all, have all the logic on their side. Those against are supported by emotion at best, inertia at worst.

So people begin to waver, and soon minds begin to change. I love this process. It’s the same consciousness raising process I’ve seen and lived, several times before.

In the end, those who are internally liberated have switched sides and are in favor of forced exit of the powerful from the closet. Those who aren’t are left with the vague uneasiness that somehow they’ve missed the magic bus, and are defending a position that’s essentially reactionary.

I was one such creature. I must say that without your magazine, it would have taken me a lot longer to see the light.

My hope is that with more articles like the one on Forbes, we’ll hasten the day when there won’t ever need to be such articles again, because there won’t be such people.

Club Conversion
Hi there!
I just wanted to say that this magazine is really excellent. In spite of the fact that I co-promote several gay events around town, I normally only read gay magazines randomly. OutWeek, however, is different, and I think it has a much broader appeal even for a non-gay audience. I think the articles are innovative, well-researched, and many of them are real fun to read. Somehow OutWeek can convince anybody, from any walk of life, that the issues it deals with are definitely important for them, too.

Don’t Shoot Me, I’m Just the Features Editor
It is sad to report that Michael Signorile has gone off the deep end and as with all rabid dogs, he should be taken out behind the shed and shot.

His column should be retitled “Personal Vendetta” for its persistent ugly attacks on anyone that refuses to be measured by his narrowly defined personal litmus test of activist politics. Not only this, but now he has the ego to claim that he is a true mover in the New York City publishing world by suggesting that writers try to “appease” him.

His attacks on Liz Smith and Jon Van Meter seemed petty at best and also smacked of sour grapes. When in disagreement with someone’s motives, Michael whips out the favorite curse of “self-hating” to blast his victims. As Bob Paris stated in his interview last month, “we didn’t come out to be activists; we’re just living our lives proudly.” Lover Rod Jackson adds, “...and we’re left behind with ‘you’re self-hating, greedy, out for money’.”

For someone who espouses his “social value”, you should realize that we all do our bit for the crisis. Whether it be giving money, help friends, march beside you or try to patiently reach ignorant friends and family, we all deal with AIDS.

I think your approach is sanctimonious and dangerous. It drives people away instead of nurturing what Mr. Paris called, “the most diverse minority in the entire world.” Do not try to bully us into your view of what good and evil is, you’re sounding as bad as Senator Helms.

John Nadeau
Brooklyn

Signorile responds: There’s a big difference between not wanting to be a card-waving, screaming activist and kissing up to the people who are killing you. I don’t say everyone must be forced to join ACT UP, but doing a TV show with Roger Alles and singing the praises of the Buckleys, as in the case of Smith, and kissing up to Smith in the cleverly disguised way that Van Meter does, are equally reprehensible.

Gel Funny
It is no joke that the vast majority of Americans remain completely ignorant of Canada. It is truly surprising, however, to see how low you will sink to pande to this mentality (“How to Make a Canadian Queer Scream”, no. 35, Feb. 25). Maybe your magazine was taken over by an upstart group of isolationist closet Republicans when no one was looking; perhaps you should check up on this.

The worst offense of all is that the article just isn’t funny. Satire is a difficult art; could you not locate a professional writer to undertake the strenuous task of propagating stereotyped national clichés?

As a Canadian reader of your parochial little magazine, I am constantly underwhelmed by your lack of understanding of issues that may be important outside your immediate geographic area. Indeed, the only incentive left to buy your magazine is Bradley Ball's "Out Of My Hands," which consistently includes more Canadian content than even our own news media sees fit to use. Obviously your columnist, undoubtedly an American citizen, has a better understanding of the Canadian national character than the Canadian author of your unfortunate satiric article. Mr. Ball's column notwithstanding, unless there is some improvement in the writing, editing and world view in your magazine, I will soon be buying Chatelaine instead of OutWeek.

Do you want to know how to really make a Canadian queer scream? It's simple—try and shove bad writing down his or her throat at $3.95 U.S. a copy. It works every time.

Pyramid Confusion

I would like to thank Liz and Sydney for so "kindly" mentioning me In their column ("Out on the Town," no. 38, Mar. 18). Yes, It is true that I am continuing to host the Pyramid Club's Gay Sunday Nights. I have done so for the past five years, and I started out there before that as a go-go dancer. The Pyramid Club has always been (and continues to be) my drag headquarters.

Unfortunately, In all the confusion and hubris arising from the managerial shift and subsequent media coverage, some misinformation was printed concerning me. This letter is aimed at clearing that up. No, I am not hosting Gay Wednesday Nights at the Pyramid. D.J. Tennessee is doing a fine job of that with his "house nation". As for myself, one night a week, Sundays, are all these high heels can handle. Thank you.

Corrections:

In issue 38, a photo caption in the article on local Latino groups misidentified Daisy DeJesus as a member of Salsa Soul Sisters. She is co-treasurer of Las Buenas Amigas, as the article states.

Because of an editing error, the signer for the GLAAD Tidings column was omitted. The article was authored by Henry Yeager.

Several photo captions were dropped in that issue as well. The picture of Veronica Prago on page 9 is by Bill Bytsura. And the photo of the Montreal AIDS Conference on page 36 is Rex Woodner's.

Clarification:

In the same issue, an article on the marching position for women of color in the 1990 gay pride parade incorrectly reported that the People of Color Steering Committee is a formal organizing body of Heritage of Pride, the group which sponsors the parade. It is not. Also, according to Heritage of Pride, there has been a people of color contingent in the Gay Pride Parade since 1985. This fact, however, was never raised at the March 1 lesbian town meeting, which was called to discuss the creation of just such a contingent, and about which OutWeek was reporting.
Gay Rights in Pittsburgh

by Rex Wockner

PITTSBURGH—The city council passed a gay rights ordinance here March 20 by a 6-2-1 vote.

According to activists, the amendment to the city code will protect lesbians and gays from discrimination in employment, housing and public accommodations.

Similar laws are on the books in Philadelphia and Harrisburg and in more than 60 cities nationwide.

The battle was led by the Pittsburgh Fairness Campaign, which worked to unseat opposition council members in the 1989 election after the council failed to pass the measure in 1988.

The election ultimately saw the defeat of three of the bill's four opponents and the re-election of three of its four supporters.

During the election campaign, the activist group CRY OUT! staged a series of demonstrations against council members and Mayor Sophie Masloff, who, they charged, had lobbied against the bill in closed-door meetings while supporting it in public.

As a result of the pressure, Masloff finally signed an executive order a year ago banning employment discrimination against gays in city jobs. She has promised to sign the new ordinance as well.

In the final month of this year's push, controversy swelled around council member Duane Darkins, who abstained from voting March 20.

Darkins, who is Black, said he was unable to support the measure, because only one of the 70 gay-rights supporters who testified before the council was Black.

He said that indicates that the gay community is racist.

According to Jeff Howells, managing editor of the Pittsburgh gay newspaper Out, activists explained to Darkins that the racial ratio was more the result of homophobia in the Black community than racism in the gay community, but Darkins remained firm in his conviction.

The ordinance push was helped this year by the decision of the Pittsburgh Roman Catholic Diocese to stay out of the public debate, activists believe. In 1988, Catholic opposition was seen as a major factor in the defeat of the gay rights bill.

N.C. City Nixes Gay Rights Again

by Kathy Hoke

GREENSBORO, N.C.—Sitting silently and squirming ever so slightly, the five Greensboro City Council members who voted to chop out the words "sexual preference" from city personnel policy last Christmas refused this month to change their minds.

The 5-4 vote against renewing protection for gay and lesbian employees hardly surprised members of the Guilford Alliance for Gay and Lesbian Equality, who realized five days before the March 1 council meeting that the possible swing vote of new council member Richard Grubar was not going to come through.

"He told us to stop calling him," said Marnie Thompson, spokesperson for the Alliance. "We knew we had lost."

But in the half hour discussion before the March 1 vote, council members heard Alliance leaders and several non-gay allies urge protection for gay and lesbian city employees.

Police Admit Bias

Thompson, in a last attempt to convince opponents that homophobia exists in Greensboro, told the council for the first time that the city police department routinely gives job applicants lie detector tests in which they are asked the questions, "Have you ever had a homosexual relationship?" and "Have you ever had homosexual feelings?". The questions were reported, she said, by an assistant police chief during confidential hearings in 1988 before a subcommittee of the city Human Relations Commission investigating anti-gay violence, harassment and discrimination.

Later, Police Chief Sylvester Daughtry admitted the department refuses to hire people who say they are "practicing homosexuals," but said applicants are not asked about their sexual orientation during lie detector tests.

The state crime-against-nature law outlaws virtually all sexual acts except intercourse in the "missionary position" between a married couple. Thompson reminded council members that the law makes felons out of most city employees, who would have to be dismissed if the law were enforced fairly.

But the testimony won no new converts to human rights. Mayor Pro Tem Carolyn Allen, who received substantial support from Greensboro gay men and lesbians in last November's elections, proposed the following sentence be added to city personnel policy. "Sexual orientation, defined as homosexual, heterosexual or bisexual, is a non-job-related characteristic." Supporting her motion were council members Earl Jones, Alma Adams and P. David Brown.

Voting against it were Grubar, Mayor Vic Nussbaum and councilmembers William J. Burckley, Robert Mays Jr. and Tom Phillips. They were the same five who voted Dec. 28, without warning, to reverse anti-bias protection added to the personnel policy last October by the previous council.

Current policy bans discrimination on the basis of "any non-job-related characteristic," including race, sex, age, religion, ethnic origin and handicapping condition.

With more than two years of struggle for legal protection ending in defeat, everyone who worked for human rights in Greensboro was disappointed. "We're clearly angry about it," said Kevin Drewery, cofounder of OUT! Greensboro, a tiny six-month-old group advocating direct action in fighting for gay rights.

Drewery, who says his group has just one other official member, predicted that OUT! Greensboro eventually will become aligned with the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power. In October 1989 and again last February, OUT! Greensboro organized demonstrations at city hall in support of the gay protection in the personnel policy.

"We're tired of taking it," Drewery said. "I don't believe in sitting quietly when we get crapped on. It's time we get upset."

Both Thompson and Drewery agree that new arena for action is the 1991 municipal elections. "We cannot do anything more with those nine people on city council," Thompson said. "Our next job is to work hard on the 1991 election."

Support for Media, Mainstream

Meanwhile, local news media are covering gay issues fairly, and the Greensboro News & Record has written editorials in support of the anti-discrimination clause. Significant support has come from several community groups, including the board of the League of Women Voters of Guilford County, and two Lutheran ministers who spoke in support of the policy change.

ACT UP/KC Tackles Local AIDS Group

by Rex Wockner

KANSAS CITY—ACT UP/Kansas City, in a front-page article in its March newsletter, attacked the Heartland AIDS Resource Council for its refusal to endorse the push to add the words "sexual orientation" to this city's Human Rights Ordinance.

ACT UP member Mark Chaney said HARC has "effectively turned its closeted back on its gay clients and the gay community of Kansas City."

The newsletter listed by name the four HARC board members who "displayed weasel-like behavior" in opposing the endorsement.

Approximately 76 percent of persons with AIDS in Kansas City are gay or bisexual men, and HARC's current caseload of 180 includes approximately 125 gays, according to a spokesman.

Hetero Hire at Gay Group Prompts Outcry

by Masha Gessen

NEW YORK—The national gay and lesbian organization with perhaps the lowest profile has become the epicenter of a controversy that may affect not only the future of the group, but the mood and makeup of the lesbian and gay movement nationwide.

As OutWeek went to press, the staff and volunteers of the Fund for Human Dignity had taken the extraordinary step of publicly denouncing its own board of directors' choice of a heterosexual man for the job of executive director of the agency.

"We...strongly object to the appointment of a white, heterosexual male as the leader of an important national 'gay and lesbian organization,'" read the statement, which, according to development director Paula Presley, was 'approved Unanimously by the staff and volunteers. "We feel that the board's decision is an insult to every gay man and lesbian. This appointment is a manifestation of homophobia and self-hatred. And we are appalled."

For her part, board co-Chair Ann Wilson was appalled by what she called "complete insubordination" of the Fund staff whose statement was not authorized by the board. "We consider this libel and defamation," exclaimed Wilson. She refused to say, however, what, if any, misinformation was contained in the staff statement.

Wilson reluctantly confirmed that Robert Brading, 40, an employee of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, had been offered the job of the Fund's executive director. But, according to Wilson, Brading had not yet given notice at his current job. Brading was on vacation in the Grand Canyon, and could not be contacted at press time.

"Sexual orientation is not a factor in the search," maintained Wilson, who also argued that New York's ban on sexual-orientation discrimination prohibits the consideration of sexual orientation during a hiring process.

Employees of the organization countered that in the case of an organization that states on its letterhead that it is dedicated to "educating the public about the lives of lesbians and gay men" the sexual orientation of a potential executive director has a direct impact on the applicant's ability to do the job. The city ordinance prevents employers from using sexual orientation as a criterion for choosing among applicants who are equally qualified.

"This particular individual has no familiarity with gay and lesbian issues," asserted Presley. "Who is going to teach him? Is it going to be our responsibility? Is it going to be my responsibility?"

"Yes, we try for empathy and sensitivity" responded Wilson, "but we also need the most qualified person for the job." She pointed out that other organizations with roots in the gay and lesbian community have chosen straight leaders as well: "There's precedent, in terms of organizations in New Jersey, California and Colorado—AIDS organizations, which are even more political and activist than an education organization, that are led by straight people."

The 15-year-old Fund for Human Dignity is an educational foundation that became an independent organization in 1985 when it split from the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force. It offers three programs: a national crisis line, a research center which distributes educational publications and the "Positive Images" campaign, a print advertising drive begun in partnership with the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation. The group employs seven people in its educational programs, and nine in its fundraising arm.

No Qualified Gays?

According to the staff statement, the board has disclosed that it "could find no qualified gay or lesbian person to fill the position of executive director." Wilson refused to confirm or deny the accuracy of this statement, saying that "if it was ever made, it was in a private meeting with the staff."

Cops Nab Editor of NAMBLA Bulletin

by Duncan Osborne

NEW YORK—Chris Farrell, a member of the North American Man/Boy Love Association (NAMBLA) and editor of the NAMBLA Bulletin, was arrested by officers of the Manhattan South Public Morals Division of the New York City Police Department on March 19th at his place of employment for allegedly having sex with four news photographers at Farrell's arrest, the fact that the arrest occurred at Farrell's workplace and the information the police supplied to news organizations concerning Farrell's role in NAMBLA.

"Public Morals Division?" said Dobbs. "What era are we living in? There certainly was consent if money was exchanged."

David Barr, a staff attorney with the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, did not preclude the possibility that a relationship could develop and be healthy between a man and a boy, but he expressed concern about a minor's ability to consent to sex and, particularly, to consent to sex with an adult. "My assumption would be that more often than not it is coercive, and with an exchange of money it is inherently coercive," Barr said.

At press time, Farrell, a resident of Queens, was being held at the Queens House of Detention in protective custody, and represented by a court-appointed Legal Aid attorney. His bail had been set at $75,000.

Teenaged boys from Brooklyn.

According to police officer Fred Weiner of the Deputy Commissioner's Office of Public Information, Farrell, 32, has been charged with one count of sodomy in the first degree, 18 counts of sodomy in the third degree and nine counts of endangering the welfare of a child. The police claim Farrell began his relations with the youths, ages 13 to 16, in July of 1989. Farrell is alleged to have paid them to engage in oral sex. The arrest is reportedly the result of a six-month long investigation.

Bill Andriette, spokesperson for NAMBLA, stated that Farrell was arrested for acts that appear to be consensual.

"Sex between men and boys is the one remaining area in society where consent and healthy sex are treated in a blindly, moralistic way," said Andriette.

NAMBLA is a political and educational group that supports boys and men who have an interest in intergenerational relationships. NAMBLA has a membership of approximately 500.

Bill Dobbs, an activist lawyer in the lesbian and gay community, called the arrest "a highly political prosecution." He referred to it as part of a "witch hunt" intended to wipe out a "sexual dissident group." Dobbs offered as evidence the presence of...
Two Lesbians Vie for S.F. Council Seats

by James Waller

SAN FRANCISCO—Two prominent members of San Francisco’s lesbian community will be among the contenders in the Board of City Supervisors election to be held this coming November. Roberta Achtenberg, an attorney and the director of the San Francisco-based National Center for Lesbian Rights, and Carol Migden, a public-health educator with a long involvement in California Democratic Party politics, will join what is expected to be a large field of candidates vying for the five seats on the 11-member board that are up for election this year.

Migden and Achtenberg, also a Democrat, are the first openly lesbian women ever to run for election to the board. The San Francisco Board of City Supervisors gained a degree of prominence unusual for a municipal council in 1978, when Harvey Milk became its first openly gay member—and the first openly gay man to be elected to public office in the United States.

At the time of Milk’s election, supervisors were chosen by district. Since then, however, San Francisco has reverted to city-wide election of supervisors, and all candidates in the November election will compete with one another on an at-large basis.

Sources familiar with San Francisco politics report that incumbents running for re-election to the board have a strong edge over nonincumbents competing for those seats.

What makes this year’s race particularly interesting is that at least one seat—and possibly two or three—will likely be vacant and therefore up for grabs in November. Two members of the current board, Richard Hongisto and Wendy Nelder, have announced their intention to seek the office of city assessor in an election to be held in June. The outcome of that election will help determine the number of board seats that will have to be filled by nonincumbents.

An Embarrassment of Riches

In telephone interviews with OutWeek, neither Achtenberg nor Migden expressed concern over speculation that campaign resources and possibly votes may be split by the entry of two lesbian candidates into the race.

“I think that’s a wrongful assumption,” said Migden. “Certainly there’s some division of resources, but Roberta and I are going to run campaigns that are noncombative.”

Achtenberg said that the fact that two lesbians have declared their candidacy is evidence of the political maturity of San Francisco’s gay community. “We have to learn to deal with this new situation,” she said. “It’s an embarrassment of riches,” adding that the situation in which voters can choose among several lesbian and gay candidates is going to occur more and more often in the future.

“Most people in the lesbian and gay community are endorsing us both. As long as we both conduct ourselves well, we’re both in a good position to take seats on the Board of Supervisors—if not this time, then next,” Achtenberg said.

Strong Past Showings

Although neither is a seasoned politician, both Achtenberg and Migden have had some experience in campaigning for public office. In 1988, Achtenberg ran for the California State Assembly seat that had been vacated by Art Agnos when he became Mayor of San Francisco. Migden in 1982 vied for a seat on the San Francisco Community College Board. Though they lost these races, both made strong showings.

Migden’s credentials include the directorships of two Bay Area lesbian and gay social service agencies: the Pacific Center in Berkeley and Operation Concern in San Francisco. She also holds leadership positions within the California Democratic Party and is a member of the Democratic Kim Corsaro, who as publisher of the gay-oriented San Francisco Bay Times is an experienced observer of California politics, credits Migden with having played an essential role in the political resurrection of former California governor Jerry Brown. Last year Migden ran Brown's successful intra-party campaign for the chairmanship of the state Democratic Party organization.

But, Corsaro said, Achtenberg has the advantage of greater name-recognition among San Francisco voters. Achtenberg herself pointed this out, saying that she is the only one of the announced nonincumbent candidates to have achieved as much as 25 percent name-recognition in a recent poll.

Achtenberg's achievements include having edited Sexual Orientation and the Law, which since its initial publication in 1985 has served as a handbook for attorneys involved in litigating cases involving lesbian and gay rights.

Since her unsuccessful bid for the state assembly, Achtenberg has chaired a Mayor Agnos-appointed task force on revitalizing the status of women in San Francisco and has headed another task force, also commissioned by the mayor, on family policy. Its report, which is due in mid-April, will, according to Achtenberg, "deal with issues surrounding the diversity of kinds of families that exist in San Francisco. "We've tried to recognize that functioning families are an asset, and that it's the role of government to support them," Achtenberg said. "We define family very broadly, looking at the family from a functional point of view." The task force report will present recommendations on domestic partnership legislation, among other matters.

Health Care, Family, Leadership

Both Achtenberg and Migden are involved in longstanding domestic partnerships. Achtenberg has been with her lover, San Francisco municipal court judge Mary C. Morgan, for eight years and is the adoptive parent of Morgan's son. Migden has been with her lover for about five years.

Both candidates' views concerning the important issues facing San Francisco are colored by their background. Migden, whose experience in public health includes current membership on the California health commission, gave health-related issues top priority:

"AIDS, homelessness, health care, drug abuse prevention — to me they're all related," she said. "I know how to get health-care programs to work, and as someone deeply involved in Democratic politics I have the know-how to lobby for needed programs."

Migden added that she wants to address the health problems of the Bay Area lesbian community, including, she said, growing incidence of chronic fatigue syndrome and cancer.

Although her platform is in many respects similar to Migden's, Achtenberg lays the stress on quality of life and family issues such as increased day-care options and a proposal that would allow city workers to take "family care leave" when a family member (broadly defined) becomes seriously ill.

Mandela Answers Gay Lib Question

Simon Nkoli Responds

Mandela Answers Gay Lib Question

Nelson Mandela, African National Congress Deputy President and spiritual leader, answered a question from a gay journalist during a joint news conference with Swedish Prime Minister Ingvar Quisthorn. The journalist, Bill Shiller, works with Radio Sweden shortwave and the gay newspaper Reporter. During the conference, Shiller asked:

"I understand that in South Africa a number of lesbian and gay organizations have also been fighting for your release. What is the role of these groups? What rights will they have in a new South Africa under your leadership and the leadership of the ANC? Will they be free or continue to be persecuted?"

Mandela responded: "We have already indicated that we are presently addressing the issues of uniting all anti-apartheid forces we have in this regard, drawing no distinctions whatsoever concerning anti-apartheid organizations. Whether we are going to succeed in bringing about that united front depends on the response of the organizations involved. But all I can assure you is that we will leave no stone unturned in our effort to unite the oppressed people of our country."

It was the second time Mandela has been asked about gay and lesbian issues. In late February, gay South African activist Alfred Siphiwe Machela confronted Mandela during a visit to the gay-community-based Township AIDS project in Soweto.

Machela asked Mandela if he was aware that gay and lesbian campaigners had aggressively worked for his release from prison. Mandela responded: "You have to see MANDELA on page 30".

State Pol Looks to Crack Down on Church Protests

Nina Reyes

ALBANY—In reaction to ACT UP's demonstration last December at St. Patrick's Cathedral, a conservative state senator from Poughkeepsie has filed two pieces of legislation that phrase outrage at the protesters' tactics in legislative terms that apparently appeal to many of the state's other lawmakers. Gay, lesbian and civil-liberties activists, however, are taking a wait-and-see attitude toward the legislation.

Sen. Jay P. Rolison, a conservative Republican, filed the legislation in late January, stating publicly at that time that existing law apparently does not deter demonstrations such as the one that took place at St. Patrick's Cathedral. The first bill Rolison proposed would make defiling or destroying religious objects valued at less than $1,500 or defacing a house of religion a more serious felony. The second bill would increase the maximum penalty for disruption of a religious service to one year in jail.

"Basically the bills were filed in order to enhance the protection of various religious institutions across the state, and to guard against people using them as a forum for protest," stated Joe Conway, a press aide for Sen. Rolison.

"We really don't think it is proper to conflict with people's right to worship freely."

Conway also stressed, however, that Rolison is a "strong believer" in the right to protest.

"We really want to make clear that these laws are not targeted towards any specified group whatsoever," he said, although he acknowledged that Rolison's impetus came "largely in response to the insensitivity shown by protesters" at St. Patrick's Cathedral.

"Our basic position on this is that regardless of the cause one espouses," Conway concluded, "no one has the right to impede people's constitutional right to freedom of religion."

But while electoral and legal activists agree that the bills seem to infringe on the first amendment guarantee of separation of church and state, a commitment to watching the bills closely is as far as any of these groups are currently willing to go.

"We're going to track the bills," Jennifer Rich, director of the New York State Lesbian and Gay Lobby, offered, although she expressed doubt that lobbying could stop the bill were it to begin moving through the Senate process.

Pam Katz, assistant legislative director for the New York Civil Liberties Union, stated that her organization, too, intends to monitor Rolison's bills. Because the bills' origin can clearly be traced back to the St. Patrick's demonstration, she added, the Republican-controlled Senate may be predisposed to view them favorably. "The Senate is usually not particularly sympathetic to gay rights groups as a body," she warned.

Ironically, while the December 10 demonstration has been widely perceived as a protest against the anti-gay policies of the Catholic Church, in fact, the demonstration specifically targeted the church's position against the use of condoms to prevent the spread of AIDS, and its anti-abortion stance. The protest, during which more than 100 people were arrested, drew nearly 5,000 demonstrators.

Hearing about the Rolison bills for the first time when he was contacted for comment, Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund lawyer David Barr said angrily, "If I have a dispute with my church, as long as I am not causing physical harm to anybody, it's my business. It's my dispute with my church." Barr also said that if the bills do pass, his organization will challenge their legality in court.

Currently, both bills are before the Senate Committee on Codes, and the desecration bill is also before the assembly's codes committee. Sen. Rolison is a member of that committee, and the impressive list of sponsors supporting the desecration bill is made up almost entirely of his fellow Republican conservatives. In the assembly, that bill is supported by a full roster of democratic members, including a number of liberal democrats who have supported both the gay and lesbian civil rights bill and the hate crimes bill.
Do Gay Men Have Another Microbe to Watch Out For?

Researchers say KS is not always AIDS

by Rex Wockner

Presuppositions about AIDS were thrown for a loop in January following the publication of data on HIV-negative gay men in New York who have Kaposi's sarcoma, long considered a primary opportunistic infection that follows infection with "the AIDS virus."

At the same time, researchers at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta published a report in the British journal The Lancet revealing that KS is much more common among gay men with AIDS than among any other persons with AIDS.

Both findings are being construed as evidence that KS is caused by an unknown sexually transmitted agent that is widespread in the U.S. gay community but not in other communities affected by AIDS.

The upshot is that some gay men who were diagnosed with AIDS because they have KS might not actually have AIDS at all. And on the other hand, thousands, perhaps millions, of people who are HIV-negative may be at some risk for sexually transmitted cancer.

HIV skeptics, who do not believe HIV is the cause of AIDS, have jumped on the findings to bolster their belief that the government goofed six years ago in pronouncing HIV the cause of AIDS.

Other observers, including such staid figures as Randy Shilts, author of the AIDS history And The Band Played On, say that, at the least, the findings seem to dramatically alter the AIDS ballgame, now well into the middle innings.

"I can't believe everybody's being so blasé about this," Shilts said in an interview. "If I were a government official and this information surfaced, I'd call an emergency conference of top AIDS people...and try to figure out what this means. This is a whole new curve ball. Why is everybody yawning at a new disease [KS] that kills people?"

The Findings

In their Lancet article, CDC researchers said "Kaposi's sarcoma in persons with AIDS may be caused by an as-yet-unidentified infectious agent transmitted mainly by sexual contact."

They cited as evidence the fact that gay men with AIDS get KS at a rate much higher than other individuals with AIDS—21 percent of gay men versus five percent of IV drug users and one percent of hemophiliacs.

Secondly, since the advent of gay safe sex, KS has declined among gay men. In the beginning of the AIDS epidemic, half of all gay PWAs had KS, but now only 15 percent do. The CDC researchers believe safe sex has slowed transmission of the KS agent.

A third piece of the puzzle: Women who acquired HIV from bisexual men have KS at a rate four-times higher than women who acquired HIV from straight men—further evidence, researchers say, that KS is infecting men who have sex with men.

Finally, KS afflicts only three percent of PWAs in Kansas, but 31 percent of PWAs in New York—evidence that the KS agent is more prevalent in specific geographic areas.

In the meantime, the New York University Medical Center's Dr. Alvin Friedman-Kien reported to The Lancet that six of his gay KS patients test HIV-negative with the most sophisticated procedures.

Friedman-Kien speculates that HIV and the KS agent entered the U.S. gay population at about the same time, with some men being exposed only to one or the other.

The hypothesis makes sense to CDC deputy director for science, Dr. Harold Jaffe, one of the authors of The Lancet article. Epidemiological data, he said, "build a pretty convincing argument that there is a transmissible factor" causing KS.

The CDC's Thomas Peterman, another co-author of the report, agrees, but downplays the significance of the new findings.

"The relationship of KS to HIV infection is not changed by this," Peterman said. "All opportunistic infections that you see in people with HIV infection are caused by other organisms. Some journalists and others are thinking this suggests HIV doesn't cause AIDS. If that were the case, there would be a big alarm. But this is just more evidence that KS is caused by an infectious condition and, in a way, it's sort of so what?"

Peterman said recent research suggests that about three percent of gay men with KS are HIV-negative "and for a few people who have KS, this may be important to realize."

But Peterman speculated that most HIV-negative individuals who are infected with the KS agent will not.
develop KS because, he believes, the KS agent requires a damaged immune system before it can cause much harm.

Meanwhile, chief U.S. AIDS researcher Robert Gallo, who has long struggled to explain how HIV causes AIDS (and KS), added his authority to the findings Feb. 22 in a lecture at Fordham University in the Bronx.

"Kaposi's sarcoma occurs commonly in association with HIV infection, with or without the immune deficiency," he said. "It is more common in homosexuals. Recent evidence says that aggressive Kaposi's sarcoma can also appear in the same risk group in the absence of detectable HIV. But the fact is, with HIV, it is dramatically increased."

Considering only these remarks, Gallo seems more concerned than Peterman about the threat to HIV-negatives, and those with healthy immune systems. Gallo was not available for further comment prior to deadline.

HIV Skeptics

Predictably, the news of a non-relationship between KS and HIV fueled the fires of those who say Gallo and other researchers have never proved that HIV causes AIDS at all.

One such skeptic, People With AIDS Coalition founder Michael Callen, asked: "Why isn't it as likely that HIV is just an opportunistic, reactivated virus that is the result of AIDS rather than the cause of AIDS?

"We need a seroprevalence study of HIV infection, using [the newest testing procedures] on housewives in Des Moines and grandmothers in New Jersey," Callen urged. "I'm convinced there is little doubt that we would find HIV [that is not causing disease among these people]. There has been premature closure on the question of the role of HIV in making people sick."

Most AIDS researchers do not agree. But they do believe that a small percentage of people who were said to have AIDS now do not have AIDS but merely a form of possibly benign skin cancer.

Along with Shilts, some AIDS observers are wondering why that wasn't a bigger story, both in the media and within the scientific establishment.▼
New Al Party

NEW YORK—Rev. Al Sharpton confronted his homophobic past and spoke about AIDS and the Black community at a press conference at which he announced his support for the New York gubernatorial campaign of the New Alliance Party’s Lenora Fulani. The press conference was attended by Fulani, Sharpton, NAP founder Fred Newman, Tawana Brawley and Moses Stewart, the father of Yusuf Hawkins, a Black youth slain in a racial incident in the Bensonhurst section of Brooklyn last August. Sharpton is currently on trial in New York for allegedly stealing $250,000 from a youth organization.

Fulani ran for president in 1988 and was the first Black woman to appear as an independent on ballots in all 50 states and the District of Columbia. She claims to have received two percent of the gay and lesbian vote.

During the press conference, Sharpton was asked how he could square his support for the pro-gay NAP with his previous history of homophobia, particularly his public use of words like “faggot.”

“I had always thought of ‘faggot’ as more a cultural term in the Black community than a homophobic term,” he replied, “but I’ve learned that we have to be more sensitive.”

Claiming that his association with Fulani and Newman was sensitizing him to gay and lesbian concerns, Sharpton added, “I did feel homophobic” in the past, and “it takes some maturing” to get over those feelings.

“I strongly support ACT UP,” he volunteered. “They should be saluted and supported. They have, more than any other force in our city, shaken up the system.”

Claiming that Black movements, including his own, have not done enough to focus attention on the AIDS crisis, Sharpton said, “Black activist leaders have not been open about AIDS. At some point there should be a collusion of efforts between ACT UP and our movement. Together we could shake the state.” But he cautioned that first “I have to finish my linguistics course” to further sensitize himself to gay and lesbian issues.

Referring to gay and Black problems with the press, Sharpton said, “As progressive forces, we have the same enemies. If gay and Black activists agreed that we had a problem with the New...
Yom Post, we could shut the Post down. It doesn't mean we'd have to go home together afterwards."

Referring to his current trial, Sharpton added, "Look, I'm not personally gay, but I might be going to jail. Who knows what I might do?"

Straight model sues gay mag

CHICAGO—A male model is suing a Miami gay entertainment magazine for libel after his photograph appeared on the magazine's cover without his permission.

Thirty-year-old Norman Lippiatt filed suit in Cook County Circuit Court March 6, saying he was "outraged" and concerned that the incident would adversely affect his career.

"I have nothing against gays, but I'm strictly hetero myself," Lippiatt told the Chicago Sun-Times.

Photos of Lippiatt have reportedly appeared in such publications as Sports Illustrated and Gentlemen's Quarterly. His lawyer, William Gomolinski, said the Hot Shots photo was bootlegged from a boating magazine. It shows Lippiatt clad only in blue jeans and leaning against a wall.

In placing the photo on its cover, Hot Shots also indicated that Lippiatt would greet readers at a gay roller skating party at the Gold Coast Skating Rink.

"He's waiting for you at Fort Lauderdale's Famous Tuesday Night Gay Skate" a cut-line read.

The lawsuit names both Hot Shots and the rink, according to the Cook County circuit court clerk.

Hot Shots publisher Jason Bell said the photo was published a year or two ago and was provided by the skating rink. But the rink denies providing the photo.

"We haven't done anything wrong...but it seems there's going to be six months of a lot of bullshit," Bell said. "They must think they're dealing with Time or something, but there isn't any money here."

Lippiatt does not have a Chicago telephone listing and could not be reached for further comment.

NGRA legal director resigns

SAN FRANCISCO—David Bryan has resigned as Legal Director at National Gay Rights Advocates, after serving for less than two months. Bryan, who was formerly Legal Director of the Texas Human Rights Foundation, joined NGRA late in January as successor to Leonard Graff, who had become acting Executive Director of the organization when Jean O'Leary resigned that position early in December.

O'Leary's resignation came amidst a cavalcade of accusations and allegations ranging from financial improprieties to the verbal abuse of staff members.

According to Graff, Bryan decided that "there was not a good fit" with the organization, and preferred to return to Texas, where he has applied for reappointment to his former position, which had not yet been filled. Bryan could not be reached for comment.

His resignation means that NGRA is once again without any full-time legal staff. Graff, who returned to private practice in December, has been covering the NGRA caseload with the assistance of volunteers. Former staff attorneys Ben Schatz and Cynthia Goldstein were forced to resign last fall by the NGRA Board, during a highly-publicized purge of the group's employees under Q'Leary.

At the time of Bryan's resignation, NGRA was interviewing applicants to fill the two staff attorney positions. Now it is adding a legal director search to its agenda. —Arthur S. Leonard

Cop fingered in violence at ACT UP demo

NEW YORK—After deciding late last year to reopen a closed investigation into alleged police violence at an ACT UP demonstration, the Civilian Complaint Review Board (CCRB) of the NY Police Department has recommended that disciplinary action be taken against one officer for allegedly abusing two ACT UP members.

The Wall Street demonstration in March 1988 resulted in 111 arrests. ACT UP protesters complained of widespread police misconduct and abuse, and in May 1988 the New York City Gay and Lesbian Anti-Violence Project (AVP) filed a complaint with the CCRB on behalf of 13 demonstrators. That complaint was dismissed last September on the grounds that the alleged incidents could not be substantiated.

Following strenuous objections from the AVP and from CCRB member Dan Johnston, matters came to a head at a raucous meeting of the Mayor's Police Council in December. The CCRB then agreed to reopen the investigation. Its investigators interviewed two additional witnesses, and re-interviewed nine people who had previously given statements.

The CCRB then recommended that disciplinary charges be preferred against Sgt. James Wagner. The investigation concurred with the allegation that Wagner punched Stephen Gendin and threw Marion Banzhaf against the steps of a bus, as well as pulling her hair. However, allegations contained in the original complaint of misconduct by four other named officers and seven unidentified officers remained unsubstantiated by the CCRB. —John Voelcker

Second skinhead sentenced

WASHINGTON—The skinhead who bragged about his “hatred for gays” and said he’d have had no remorse if Georgetown waiter Rodney Johnson had died after he was brutally attacked by a gang was sentenced to 12 to 36 years in prison.

Mark Hyder said he was sorry, but shuffled his feet, stammered and replied he wanted to seem “macho” when D.C. Superior Court Judge Robert M. Scott asked why he had made those remarks to both the press and a probation officer.

Judge Scott on March 12 gave Hyder, 18, of Southerland, Va., ten to 30 years for assault with intent to kill while armed and a consecutive two to six years for armed robbery.

Gay, lesbian and human rights activists praised the punishment, saying they are glad the ugly criminal case is over. And many criticized mainstream media for ignoring or delaying coverage of the sentencing hearings.

"It's appropriately commensurate with the crime's viciousness," said Paula Stelbrick, legal director of Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund. "They left a gay man nearly dead and have ruined his life."

Judge Scott sentenced Hyder as an adult after carefully studying a U.S. Youth Act review which gives juveniles special consideration. A month earlier, he gave Hyder's partner, David McGill, 19, of Dale City, Va., the same prison term for the attempted murder, but 3 to 4 more years for the robbery charge because of his prior assault, ironically, on another skinhead.

A jury unanimously convicted the pair after a spree of mercenary anti-gay attacks 18 months ago near Dupont Circle, a popular cruising spot for gay men, which homophobes call the "fruit loop." They were arrested by trailing D.C. police who found bloody Louisville Slugger baseball bats in their car.

A third gang member, Richard "Craig" Grimes, 18, of Ridge, Md., is still sought as a fugitive.

The attack on Johnson, one of the worst incidents of anti-gay violence here, occurred in a school parking lot next to P Street Beach along Rock Creek. About eight youths armed with bats looking to "bash some fags" for rent money confronted him after Grimes suggested they go "fuck up some faggots" for cash and credit cards, cooperating female gang members testified at the trial.

The assault "weighs heavily" on Johnson, so he skipped both hearings due to extreme stress, Linda Delaney, Johnson's attorney, said. —John Zeh

NYU ends HIV isolation

NEW YORK — New York University Medical Center has abandoned its "private rooms only" policy for people with AIDS and HIV-positive patients, after complaints from patients were backed up by staffers at the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund and the Gay Men's Health Crisis, in meetings with Medical Center administrators.

In a letter to Thomas B. Stoddard, executive director of Lambda, NYU Dean Martin S. Begun said he has appointed a team of health care professionals to implement the new policy. Stoddard said that the isolation policy had caused people to be left in the emergency room for up to ten days.

John Deats, a spokesman for NYU, told OutWeek that PWAs had originally been assigned to private rooms in order to protect them from picking up infections from other patients.

But Carisa Cunningham, a spokeswoman for GMHC, said, "Clearly, PWAs left eight to ten days in the emergency room were being exposed to many more germs than in a semi-private room." Cunningham told OutWeek that NYU's failure to quickly assign in-patient beds to PWAs had led to numerous complaints from patients.

Sources close to the situation said that NYU may have originally implemented the isolation policy in order to limit the number of AIDS patients treated at its facility.

According to Deats, none of those complaints have led to findings that "what NYU did was less than what was medically appropriate."

But Cunningham said that the New York City Commission on Human Rights is currently investigating a complaint against NYU on behalf of Ron James, who developed pneumonia while he was made to wait in the Center's emergency room for ten days. He died several days after he was finally transferred. The complaint was filed with the city by James' lover. — R. Sugden

Gay father gains visitation rights

The Iowa Supreme Court in late February overturned a lower court's order that had restricted a gay father's right to visit his children to times when "no unrelated adult" was present. In lifting the restriction, the court stated that the "unusual provision was obviously imposed on account of [the father's] homosexual lifestyle."

In ruling to restrict so severely the visitation rights of Michael Walsh, the father in the case, the lower court had obviously intended to keep Walsh's two children away from his gay lover, with whom he lives. The court's ruling to deny Walsh ordinary, liberal visitation privileges came despite testimony by Walsh's ex-wife in which she had conceded that he was a good and loving father.

In a joint friend-of-the-court brief, Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund and the San Francisco-based National Center for Lesbian Rights urged Iowa's Supreme Court to treat Walsh like any other parent entitled under Iowa law to liberal visitation unless specific harm to the child is proven.

According to Evan Wolfson, a Lambda staff attorney who helped prepare the brief, the Iowa decision represents "a trend toward recognizing that sexual orientation in and of itself represents "a trend toward recognizing that sexual orientation in and of itself ought not to be a factor in custody and visitation cases."

"But," Wolfson said, "it's still very much a state-to-state matter." Wolfson listed several states - South Carolina, Alabama, Alaska, California and New Jersey - as having good records in the protection of the rights of lesbian and gay parents, but he admitted that some states lag far behind.

For example, the Missouri Court of Appeals ruled last December to award custody of a 13-year-old girl and an eight-year-old boy to their father instead of their mother because of the mother's lesbian activities. The ruling contradicted the expressed wishes of the children.

Lambda Legal Defense is currently involved in what will probably be groundbreaking visitation cases in New York and California. In both cases a lesbian co-parent is suing her former lover - the biological mother - for the right to visit a child whom the two had parented together before separating. — James Waller

Outlines burglarized

CHICAGO—The office of Chicago Outlines, a monthly news magazine for the gay and lesbian community, was cleaned out by burglars early the morning of March 18.

According to publisher Tracy Bain, the thieves made off with three Macintosh computers, a stretch screen for desktop publishing, a laser printer, a fax machine, a television, a stereo and other electronic items. Outlines was insured and has begun replacing the computers.

The most significant loss was information stored on the hard-disks of the computers - such as lists of bars and community organizations, advertising copy, graphics and other material that appears in each issue of the newspaper.

The hard-disks also contained highly customized software programs for both desktop publishing and business record-keeping. At press time, computer experts were rushing to recreate the basic programs. Many business records and graphic creations, however, are permanently lost.

The burglary appeared to be the work of professional thieves who staged the break-in between 4:00 and 7:30 am, accessing the newspaper's third-floor offices through a back stairwell. A crowbar was apparently used to pry through the office's heavy metal door.

There is no indication that the burglary was motivated by either anti-gay prejudice or business rivalry. An expensive stat camera that is too large to steal was not damaged, and important information stored in file cabinets was not disturbed.

Bain promised that both Outlines and Nightlines would appear as scheduled March 28.

"We're just going to do it," she said. "This could have happened two days later, and we still would have been able to make it."
Florida considers forced testing

TALLAHASSE, Florida—The Florida Senate is considering a bill that would permit forced AIDS testing of any person who "significantly exposes" police, emergency or health workers to blood or bodily fluids. The proposed legislation, which was initiated by the Metro-Dade (County) Police Benevolent Association, is one of three bills currently before the Florida legislature that would authorize mandatory AIDS testing and endanger the privacy of some HIV-positive individuals.

One of the other proposed measures would require alleged sex offenders to be tested for HIV infection at the time they are charged. The third proposal, which is backed by the Florida Sheriffs' Association, would require that the state's Department of Corrections turn over data on prisoners who have tested HIV-positive to sheriff's departments throughout the state.

All three proposals are being battled by the Florida AIDS Legal Defense and Education Fund, a lobbying group headquartered in Tallahassee. The fund's president, Jeff Peters, told OutWeek that any of the measures, if approved, would inflame AIDS hysteria and significantly set back the progress made in recent years toward protecting the civil rights of HIV-infected Floridians.

Peters believes that the bill sponsored by the Sheriffs' Association is a thinly disguised attempt to permit the quarantining of HIV-infected inmates in Florida's correctional institutions. Although Peters claims that the proposed measures have little or no support in Florida's House of Representatives, he fears that politicians', election-year "posturing" on issues of law enforcement and public health may give the bills some chance of success.

Peters' group is urging people from around the country to write to Florida legislators voicing their opposition to any statutes that would authorize mandatory testing.
Answering the Lavender Question

by Ivy Young

The 1990 census should be arriving at households throughout the country as you read this. This year, for the first time ever, the decennial survey of the entire U.S. population includes a “lavender question” that will have a direct impact on some of the issues affecting lesbians and gay men.

The Census Bureau has added the category “unmarried partner” to the relationship section of the questionnaire. Expanding the selection choice beyond “roommate/partner” or “roomer/boarder”, the new category is, according to some sources, the bureau’s attempt to get an accurate count of the number of heterosexual couples living together without “benefit of marriage.”

By simple deduction, however, census officials will also be able to determine the number of same-sex couples living together in committed relationships. The Census Bureau has stated the same-sex couples information will be published along with the statistics on heterosexual unmarried partners.

For those of us working in the lesbian and gay families arena, that information could prove vital to the success of our efforts in the future, as legislative agendas are set, private industry initiatives launched, and social priorities determined.

The counting of gay and lesbian couples is an issue that should be of particular interest to New Yorkers, where domestic partner ordinances are being promoted in both the state legislature and the New York City Council.

The Census Bureau has been roundly criticized for its failure to alert affected groups that the question even exists, or, for that matter, what “unmarried partner” actually means. The census has defined “unmarried partner” as those who share a household “for more personal reasons.”

There has been no outreach effort, no community education, no discussion with lesbian and gay activists in particular, about how best to ensure that the question is understood and answered accurately.

The Census Bureau does not perceive, or more likely, does not care, that for lesbian and gay couples, answering the survey honestly involves more than a simple check off. The issue of government intrusion and privacy is a crucial one for many lesbians and gay men; yet census officials have made no effort to counter the fear and apprehension that could lead to a serious undercount of same-sex couples.

Unknown to many gays and lesbians is the fact that strict provisions are in place for protecting census confidentiality.

Title 13 of the U.S. Code prevents any agency, including the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Internal Revenue Service, the FBI, CIA, courts, military and welfare agencies, from accessing information about you.

Rumors of a boycott have been disproven by action in the opposite direction. In Southern California, “We Count,” an ad hoc committee of gay/lesbian activists, has launched a massive outreach and education program. In Chicago, IMPACT, the gay and lesbian political action committee, is promoting gay census participation. In San Francisco, State Representative Milton Marks has planned a press conference on gays in the census.

From New York’s landmark Brasic decision to the San Francisco Board of Supervisors’ unanimous passage of domestic partner legislation, recognition and support of lesbian and gay relationships is growing.

Some lesbian and gay activists have predicted that as few as ten percent of those couples affected by the “unmarried partner” question will respond honestly. But, a recent poll conducted by the Washington Blade found that of the couples responding, 75 percent said they would answer the question truthfully.

Granted, the Blade survey was conducted in a major metropolitan area with a long history of gay activism and visibility. Similar results may not emerge from some small town or hamlet. Then again, they might. One staffer here at the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, just back from a conference in Wichita, reports the census question was the hot topic among gay and lesbian Kansans.

Will there be an undercount of gay and lesbian couples? Probably, just as there is with every other minority constituency in the United States. And there is still no way for single lesbians and gay men to stand up and be counted. But should that stop us from being visible, from having our loving unions institutionally recognized and codified? I don't think so.

Our job, once the census is completed, is to make sure the bureau is prepared to adjust its statistics to compensate for undercounting. We also must beat back any attempts by Sen. Jesse Helms or Rep. William Dannemeyer to instruct the Census Bureau not to tabulate same-sex data.

Our responsibility now is to provide for our community what Census Bureau officials did not—information and education. Our community must be persuaded to put aside the fear of being exposed and answer the census honestly. We have nothing to lose by being truthful.

The struggle to have our relationships and our families recognized and protected will assume much greater urgency in the decade to come. Accurate statistics gathered from the 1990 census could provide us with a small but important weapon to help wage that struggle.

Whether we choose to answer or not, we will be living with the results of the census for ten years. If we choose to deliberately absent ourselves from this process, if we elect to “disappear,” what advantage do we gain?

We believe—given the choice between visibility and obscurity, between the “lavender question” and the closet—the choice for gay and lesbian equality and recognition is obvious.

The author is the director of the Families Project at the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force.
understand that I have been imprisoned for a long time. I have heard about many organizations and their support. I will personally see to it that the rights of all people shall be discussed."

Key gay rights campaigner Simon Nkoli, speaking from Johannesburg by telephone March 15, called Mandela's Stockholm remarks "absolutely great, great news.... We can quote what he said about no stone unturned," Nkoli said.

Pressed for further analysis, Nkoli acknowledged that the answer was "a little bit indirect, not really to the issue, but certainly not to our disadvantage."

Nkoli added that activists with the Black-community-based Gay and Lesbian Organization of Witwatersrand recently participated as invited delegates to a major ANC conference.

But, beyond specific issues, Achtenberg said that a crisis of leadership on the Board of City Supervisors is the crucial problem facing San Francisco's voters.

"It sounds trite, but it's really true," she said. "The Board of Supervisors is notorious for its bickering. We don't have a lot of ideological division, yet people are pitted against one another because of a lack of leadership."

High Visibility

Achtenberg emphasized that a lesbian on the Board of City Supervisors would automatically hold a position of national importance — and would shoulder a responsibility to lesbians and gay mean far outside San Francisco's borders. "It's that visible a position. We have a variety of lesbian and gay leaders, but we're talking about a very small number of people who are in such positions of power," she said.

Harry Britt, current president of the board, is gay. Britt, who does not face re-election this year, has announced that he will retire in 1992.

Migden kicked off her campaign in January 24 and held her first fundraising event, which she described as "very successful," last week. Achtenberg officially opens her campaign on April 5 with a fundraiser at the Douglas Elementary School in San Francisco's Castro district, where she lives. She chose that site for its symbolic value: many Castro residents have recently pushed to have the school's name changed to the Harvey Milk School.

Among other candidates who have so far declared their intention to run for the board is a gay man, Jim Mangia, who has been put forward by the New Alliance Party.

HARC provides direct services to PWAs, including a food bank that distributed more than $75,000 in food in the past year.

In an interview, HARC board member Dick Solowicz, who opposes endorsing the gay-rights campaign, said the 4-4 board decision was based on HARC's desire to be seen as an AIDS organization, not a gay organization.

"Because we are funded by donations and by the generosity of people and companies and corporations, we in no way want to jeopardize the sources of funding that come to us," Solowicz said.

"If some people are uncomfortable supporting a gay organization but not uncomfortable supporting an AIDS organization, we're going to protect that.... We leave politics to political activists."

The vote against endorsing the gay campaign came at HARC's February meeting. Solowicz refused to disclose how board members voted, but charged that the breakdown printed in the ACT UP newsletter was wrong. HARC's board meetings are closed to the public.

Solowicz chastised ACT UP for making the vote a public issue, predicting that the conflict will ultimately hurt HARC's clients.

"The work we have done has been so very well accepted, and for an organization that I consider somewhat militant to try to destroy those efforts...can only hurt the entire community we try to serve," Solowicz said.

"If ACT UP wants to change its name to GACT UP—Gay AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power—that's fine. But if they're ACT UP, they ought to address AIDS."

Chaney responded by charging that some members of the HARC board "are afraid of opening their own closet doors. It's easier to focus on so-called innocent victims," he said. "It lessens HARC's chances of making a big splash in the community."

William T. Ericsson
died on Saturday, February 24th after a long and brave resistance to the HIV virus. At 32, it was the only battle he ever lost. After growing up in New Jersey and Indiana, Bill came to New York and got his first job at Dean & DeLuca and worked in their Soho and East Hampton Stores. In 1986, he began his career at Robert Hadley Associates, a company specializing in the placement of personnel in the legal field. Gradually assuming major responsibilities there, Bill remained with the firm until his death. In addition to his professional success, he was a very talented photographer whose work was shown at both the Kleinart Gallery and at the Catskill Center for Photography in Woodstock, New York. He also created the projections for the Soho Rep production of Subject to Fits as well as Fidelio at the Charlotte Opera. Funeral services were conducted at Saint Ann & Holy Trinity Episcopal Church in Brooklyn, which is a place of beauty that welcomed him in both life and death. He leaves his life companion, Richard Colavito and many loving friends. Contributions in his memory can be made to God’s Love, We Deliver.

Mark Oates
Aug. 1, 1958-Nov. 17, 1989
Mark Oates, husband/father/actor/playwright, died of AIDS on November 17, 1989. From the early 1980s, Mark was an active member of the downtown art world. He was involved in the development of several performance clubs including Club 57, Interferon and the Pyramid, which he co-founded, and appeared in countless productions at venues such as LaMama, the Saint, the Kitchen and 8BC, in works by Kestutis Nakas, Kevin Malony, John Epperson and William Shakespeare, among others. He will be remembered for his legendary production of Psycho III, the Musical which starred John Kelly and introduced Kevin Phfredd and Stephen (Taboo) Tasjen to the stage. Mark served on the Artistic Board of T.W.E.E.D. (Theatre Works: Emerging/Experimental Directions) for five years, producing works by Edgar Oliver, Iris Rose, Watchface, Michael Nee, and appearing in John Epperson’s Ballet of the Dolls and Dial M for Model. Mark continued to perform during his illness and last appeared in the T.W.E.E.D. New Works Festival at the Ohio Theatre in May 1989. His unique performance style, a combination of 60s TV sit-com zaniness and classical Delsarte gesticulation, will be fondly remembered, his uncanny ability to recognize and promote emerging talent sorely missed. Mark is survived by his wife Anne and their three-year-old son, Wade Michael. There will be a memorial service on Sunday, March 25 at 4:00 pm at the Middle Collegiate Church Social Hall, 50 East 7th Street in New York City.

David Combs
1952-1990
David Combs died February 17th of AIDS while at home surrounded by his loved ones. David owned and operated Uplift Lighting, an art deco lighting shop on Hudson Street in Greenwich Village, along with his lifemate Randy Wicker. Combs, who had been ill for a long time, chose to deal with his illness without medical assistance until last summer. In September, his and Wicker’s ordeal of waiting in NYU Medical Center’s Emergency Room corridors for six days before finally succeeding in obtaining a room, was the subject of an Outweek article, “Emergency Room Games,” October 6, 1989.

As a result of that experience, a legal complaint was filed with NYC’s AIDS Discrimination Unit of the Human Rights Commission challenging NYU’s “private rooms only” policy for HIV-positive patients.

Because of a barrage of other complaints and pressure from GMHC’s Ombudsman Office and the Lambda Legal Defense Fund, NYU Medical Center has changed its policies.

On January 18th, Combs and Wicker were wed by Rev. Robert Williams, an openly-gay Episcopalian priest, in their apartment in Marineview Plaza in Hoboken. That wedding was sympathetically featured in the local paper, the Hoboken Reporter.

David Combs was cremated. He wished his ashes to be held and mixed with those of his lifemate, Randy Wicker, and then scattered together.

A “Quilt-panel Memorial Party” will be held this spring. Donations can be made in his name to the PWA Coalition’s Giving Fund, 31 W. 26th St., New York, NY 10010.

Ronald Wiseman,
Legal Advocate for PWAs

Ronald Wiseman, the Assistant Director of Legal Services for the Gay Men’s Health Crisis, died of AIDS-related causes on March 13, 1990. He was 46 years old.

Since he started working at GMHC in July of 1987, Mr. Wiseman counseled or represented hundreds of clients with AIDS or ARC on legal matters from discrimination to wills. He specialized in landlord-tenant matters, and during his tenure, no GMHC client was ever evicted.

"Ron was a caring and committed advocate for people with AIDS," said David Hansell, GMHC’s Legal Services Director. "He made a big difference in the lives of so many people. We will all miss him as a friend and a colleague."

Wiseman received his B.A. from Miami University of Ohio and his J.D. from the Ohio State University College of Law. He was a member of the AIDS Pro Bono Panel of the Bar Association for Human Rights of Greater New York, the New York County Lawyer’s Association and the Lesbian and Gay Community Services Center.

Wiseman’s varied career included a stint in professional baseball, playing outfield for an Ohio farm team, as well as involvement in the theater as an actor and a playwright in New York. He performed off-off Broadway, where three of his plays were also produced.

Mr. Wiseman is survived by his parents, John and Jane Wiseman, his sister Ann and brother Bill of Ohio, his brother David of North Carolina and his many friends.
Todd Fleischer, 31

Todd Robert Fleischer died of complications from AIDS-related Kaposi's Sarcoma, at 6:00 pm on March 14, at Cabrini Medical Center. He was 31 years old, and had been diagnosed for two-and-one-half years.

Todd and I had been lovers on and off and on for over a year. Todd was mercurial and cynical, irreverent and snide. But he was also witty, and had an uncanny sense of irony. He was exceptionally bright, politically astute and enjoyed nothing more than a good argument. Todd made me crazy, and I loved him more than I can say.

Following his diagnosis, Todd volunteered at, and was later employed by, the Community Research Initiative (CRI) as data manager. There, he was co-investigator on a study of DHEA, and served as the principle investigator for CRI's Databank Project, which he had envisioned as a systematic compilation of data concerning community-based, alternative treatments for AIDS. Todd was also among those representing CRI at the Fifth International Conference on AIDS in Montreal.

Todd graduated summa cum laude from Hunter College in 1988, with a degree in psychology, and was Phi Beta Kappa. He had intended to pursue a career in clinical psychology.

In the early 80s, Todd worked regularly as a waiter in the theater district, while he studied dance. He also worked occasionally as a stage manager and at various video production jobs.

Todd lived in New York City's Hell's Kitchen for many years, in a tenement building he and his fellow tenants purchased from the city. Todd was a skilled carpenter and craftsman, and had renovated his apartment himself.

Todd is survived by his parents, Constance Leigh and Roy Fleischer, and his sister, Jill Fleischer Hochberg, and by many, many friends. Contributions may be made in Todd's name to the People With AIDS Health Group, 31 West 20th Street, NYC 10010.—Derek Hodel

Chemotherapy and AIDS
by Gene Fedorko

A recurring nightmare we have at HEAL (Health, Education AIDS Liaison) is that the war against AIDS in the United States is going to resemble, in the end, the model of the war against cancer. That is, after years and years of research and billions and billions of dollars spent on research, scientists are going to present us with a chemotherapeutic "solution" to the AIDS problem, and whip up their public relations support systems to cajole us into think that something significant is really being done about AIDS.

Chemotherapy in the cancer arena is sadly ineffective. In Scientific American (Nov. 1985), John Cairns, professor of microbiology, School of Public Health, Harvard University, states, "The National Cancer Institute estimates that there are more than 200,000 patients in the U.S. each year receiving chemotherapy...For a dangerous and technologically exacting form of treatment, these are dangerous figures. The number of people who are being cured can hardly amount to more than a few percent of those who are treated. Whether any of the common cancers can be cured by chemotherapy has yet to be established." (Keep in mind that "cure" is defined in government research statistics as anyone who has survived for up to five years after chemotherapy...For a dangerous and technologically exacting form of treatment, these are dangerous figures. The number of people who are being cured can hardly amount to more than a few percent of those who are treated. Whether any of the common cancers can be cured by chemotherapy has yet to be established."

In a paper published in the New England Journal of Medicine (May 8, 1986), entitled "Progress Against Cancer," John C. Bailor III (also a professor at Harvard School of Public Health, and former editor of the Journal of the National Cancer Institute) and Elaine M. Smith write, "The main conclusion we draw is that after 35 years, the intense efforts to improving treatments [for cancer] must be judged a qualified failure... We are losing the war against cancer."

True, there are some remissions, and lives are extended in some cases. But quality of life issues must be addressed. Some patients who have received chemotherapy are severely debilitated by the experience, and a great many of them die from iatrogenic causes (doctor- or medicine-induced death or disease), rather than from the cancer itself. But for all the billions spent, and all the hype we hear about cures (after the statistics are adjusted to their five-year limit, and significantly, lung cancer statistics are not mixed in with other forms of cancer statistics, they are isolated from overall cure data), the war against cancer has been a pretty dismal one, in terms of any great victories and/or cure ratios.

More than idle speculation, this indeed is the developing direction of AIDS research. For example, more than 70 percent of PWAs in federally-administered clinical trials are receiving AZT. And although now, after intense pressure from the AIDS activist movement, these programs are broadening slightly to include a few other drugs such as ddI and dd4, these drugs, like AZT, are toxic chemotherapeutic anti-HIV agents. By no coincidence, these drugs are also highly profitable and produced by very powerful pharmaceutical corporations.

We cannot accept this kind of failure in the battle against AIDS. We cannot accept a situation as being a solution where only two or three percent of deaths are averted. We cannot accept a situation whereby medical and governmental orthodoxy dictate to us what few toxic therapies are available, robbing us of patient empowerment and freedom of choice. We must press for more emphasis on less toxic treatments. There is a bias against less toxic treatments in orthodox research circles. (I will explore this bias at length in a future column.)

Other similarities abound in the war against cancer and war against AIDS. For one thing, a lot of the cast of characters is the same: Dr. Samuel Broder, Myron Essex, Pere Mansell, William Haseltine, Robert Gallo, to name but a few. Scores of others from private and government research centers have crossed over into the AIDS research arena, which is a gravy train of grants and funding.

Philosophically, there is a magic-bullet approach to the war against AIDS. The focus of the AIDS Clinical Trial Groups (ACTGs) under the direction of Dr. Anthony Fauci of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID) in Washington D.C. is that HIV causes AIDS, and most research to date on treatment for HIV has focused on toxic nucleoside analogues (anti-HIV drugs), such as AZT, ddI and dd4.

This research has been painfully slow, and may even be flawed because of the database center's inability to adequately process or interpret all the data collected. As Larry Kramer, co-founder of ACT UP said, "There is a good chance that everything NIAID and the ACTGs have told us about all the treatments they are shoving into our bodies may be based on useless or flawed data. This means there is a good chance that after nine years of an epidemic, they know absolutely zilch about anything. (After all the billions of dollars the ACTG system has cost, all we have is a little news about AZT.)"

At conferences I have been to with AIDS educators, doctors are talking about pharmaceutical "cocktails," whereby people with AIDS are treated with two or three toxic chemotherapeutic agents, such as AZT and ddI. At Celebrating our 8th year.

Perfidious Albany

by Mark Harrington

One quarter of America’s people with AIDS live in New York State. Hundreds of thousands of lives are in jeopardy because Governor Mario Cuomo knows virtually nothing of AIDS, and defers health care policy decisions to state health commissioner David Axelrod, a bloodless technocrat whose career is built upon cost-control measures which have brought New York State’s health care system to the brink of collapse.

AIDS incidence. By December 1989, 27,456 New Yorkers had been reported with AIDS, and 17,729 had died. Both numbers underestimate the true extent of the carnage. AIDS deaths among IV-drug users, for example, are 130 percent higher than recorded; most IVDUs do not get autopsies and many deaths are recorded as “drug related.” Pediatric AIDS cases are undercounted by up to 300 percent and are at least nine months behind—meaning that of the 613 pediatric cases reported up to December 1989, as many as 1,800 may have been missed.

Prevention education. New York State officials have been reluctant to provide HIV prevention information to the communities most at risk. The Catholic Church still holds extensive sway over statewide AIDS education, and thousands of people will be infected because the state failed to provide them with accurate prevention information.

Prisoners. A Catholic corrections commissioner refuses to provide condoms in prisons; his deputy recently testified that condoms would be dangerous because A) there is no consensual sex in NYS prisons; B) condoms could be filled with sand or excrement and used as weapons. AIDS is the leading cause of death in NYS prisons. Seventeen percent of men in prison are HIV positive, as are 24 percent of women in state prisons.

Homeless teenagers too are victimized by moralistic Catholic institutions, including Covenant House, which refuses to provide condoms and safe sex information to its New York clients, many of whom are at risk for HIV from unsafe sex (demanded by customers of sex workers) and drug use.

Drug use. 250,000 New Yorkers use intravenous drugs. 450,000 use cocaine or crack. The state provides only 45,000 drug treatment slots—enough to treat less than one tenth of NYS drug users. Most of those slots are for methadone maintenance, which is not effective for cocaine or crack addiction, and which has many unpleasant side effects. With the demise of NYC’s recent pilot needle exchange program, there are not effective programs in the state for preventing HIV transmission among drug users.

Funding. In fiscal year 1989, New York state spent only $52 million non-Medicaid dollars on AIDS. Massachusetts spends three times as much per AIDS case as New York; California spends 66 percent more per AIDS case. Lower spending on AIDS is directly reflected in more restricted access to health care and AIDS treatments: although New York has twice the reported AIDS incidence of California, more than twice as many Californians are receiving ddI on expanded access.

AIDS treatments. Even when New York does offer coverage for AIDS treatments—as its AIDS Drug Assistance Program (ADAP) does for people with no insurance or inadequate insurance—it does nothing to advertise this. Therefore, only well-connected PWAs can hope to obtain free ddI, aerosolized pentamidine, DHPG, alpha interferon, fluconazole, acyclovir, fansidar, ketoconazole, clotrimazole, Bactrim, Dapsone, leucovorin, etc. The number for ADAP is 1-800-542-2437. Only 5,000 of New York’s people with HIV have used ADAP’s services because of inadequate outreach.

Hospital beds. NYS lost thousands of hospital beds in the early and mid 1980s because of Dr. Axelrod’s insistence on cutting health care expenses. Now the cost is overflowing emergency rooms, hospital beds filled by homeless people with nowhere else to go, and health care triage for all New Yorkers.

Housing. In 1989, Governor Cuomo promised to build 1,100 housing units for PWAs; only 75 were built. The state has proposed a $5 million capital construction program to build housing for PWAs, but its plan is to fund expensive ($700,000 per bed) medical housing facilities which might provide units for less than 10 PWAs! ACT UP’s Housing Caucus proposes an alternative which will house more PWAs in more humane circumstances: increasing the current $450 cap on monthly rent for PWAs who have apartments, lifting the $5 million ceiling on overall rent assistance, and providing a $50 million capital program which would renovate existing stock for PWA housing. ACT UP’s Eric Sawyer estimates that up to 85 percent of PWAs can live with greater independence in scatter-site apartments or single-room occupancy hotels than in the expensive, restricted skilled-nursing facilities proposed by the state.

The State Health Department has repeatedly ignored these proposals and others that would make health care costs more manageable for PWAs. As a result, thousands of lives are jeopardized because Governor Cuomo knows virtually nothing of AIDS.

Screw Magazine is trying to use Keith Haring's death to get new subscribers.

While artist Keith Haring was alive, he helped countless AIDS, gay and generally progressive organizations raise thousands of dollars by donating designs to them. Among the organizations his artwork benefited are ACT UP, Heritage of Pride and the National Organization for Women.

Now a commercial enterprise, Screw magazine, is trying to cash in on his death. The following is a description of a recent subscription ad the magazine has published on its own behalf.

The headline on the ad screams "Swatch Me Die" and features two Haring figures involved in what looks like anal sex. The smaller print begins: "This is for real, folks, it's no red Haring—Keith's dead, and all the merchandising in the world won't bring him back. From the tiny hotel of Dylan Street to the body-body biceps of Mad, Ave., white kids, Haring's toys can be heard: "Holy shit! This sketch I bought off Keith for the price of a tube of Whoopee Lube—it must be worth a bleeding fortune." Reproductions were cut out of the Screw office, where a sweaty employee pointed out that Screw's posh upstairs space was the site of another handed down on our subscription roster. So subscribe, already." There's more in the same vein.

To the extent that Screw magazine wants to be outrageously sexual in an era in which Helms would like to shut down every porn magazine, we support it. But this ad has nothing to do with sex and everything to do with exploiting a dead man. It is a simple-minded, incredibly nasty, commercial attempt to profiteer off the death of a man who was extremely popular and generous.

We suggest you write to Al Goldstein, the man behind the Screw magazine empire, which includes the late night porn show Midnight Blue, and point out this difference to him. Write: Al Goldstein, Milky Way Productions, P.O. Box 432, Old Chelsea Station, New York, NY 10113. Or call him at (212) 989-8001.

The New York Times, for the second time in a month, has misreported the sexual orientation of someone who died a violent death.

On March 15th, both New York Newsday and the Times wrote extensive stories about a woman, Loretta Rivera, who was killed by a stray bullet as she walked to her Brooklyn home.
on the Zappalorti murder on Staten Island, the Times was the only paper in the city to quote the father of the slain man denying that his son was gay. Two other papers, including the Daily News, ran grammatically similar quotes in which the father acknowledged that his son was gay. When pressed, the Times stood by their reporter's version of Zappalorti's quote, and refused to run a correction.

What we have here is either incredibly sloppy journalism, or a pattern of appalling editorial bias. To put it bluntly, it seems that the Times is unwilling to believe that nice Italian families on Staten Island, or nice Hispanic families in Brooklyn, can have gay people in them.

The Times needs to hear from you that the public has noticed this trend of misreporting the deaths of gay men and women. And that lesbians and gay men refuse to be rendered invisible by the Times' unwillingness to report on, or locate, the facts.

Write to Metropolitan Editor John Darnton, c/o The New York Times, 229 West 43rd Street, New York, NY 10036. Or call the Times at (212) 556-1234.

Housing Caucus will meet with state officials on April 6.

Community-based organizations. Government neglect led to the establishment of many underfunded, overworked community-based organizations working in communities affected by AIDS. Other than NYC's Gay Men's Health Crisis, most of these CBOs are strapped for funds, staff and space. Keith Cylar of NYC's Minority Task Force on AIDS says CBOs need "Money, space, technical assistance, case management and the ability to refer clients directly to community health clinics. I can't get primary health care for my clients because I don't have a formalized relationship with a hospital, or to a clinic that provides outpatient care. We don't have the resources to put enough of an emphasis on the substance-abusing population, prisoners, the previously incarcerated and HIV-infected people who don't meet the CDC AIDS definition. We need money for emergency services, transportation tokens, child care for women..." The list goes on and on.

New York state's response to the AIDS epidemic amounts to a campaign of genocide by silence, ignorance and indifference. The solution depends on challenging Cuomo's broken promises and exposing his lies. See you in Albany on March 28.

One conference, a doctor suggested that in the very near future people with AIDS will first be put on AZT, which is toxic to the bone marrow, then on ddl, which is toxic to the central nervous system, but will give the bone marrow a rest, then back on AZT after the ddl gets to be too much for the central nervous system, and so on, ad nauseam.

An important difference so far between the AIDS and the cancer communities is that the AIDS community is more organized, more militant and many of us are alarmed at the grotesque inadequacies of the health-care system and the research structures in our country. We have come up with a lot of very creative alternatives to orthodox research policies, for example, Community Research Initiatives (CRI), parallel tracking, intensely scrutinizing the inadequacies of government research efforts, peering into the inner workings of NIAID and the ACTG, continuously exposing the conflict-of-interest relationships between the FDA and the industry it is supposed to regulate, and exposing the efforts by insurance companies to limit or curtail coverage for people with HIV, to name a few.

We must all work together to make desperately-needed changes in our research system. A toxic chemotherapeutic "solution" that has only a minuscule "cure" ratio can never be acceptable to the AIDS community.

Maybe you don't like using condoms. But if you're going to have sex, a latex condom with a spermicide is your best protection against the AIDS virus.

Use them every time, from start to finish, according to the manufacturers' directions. Because no one has ever been cured of AIDS. More than 40,000 Americans have already died from it.

And even if you don't like condoms, using them is definitely better than that.

HELP STOP AIDS, USE A CONDOM.
Swing Out, Sisters!
About a month ago, a bunch of us editors were sitting around talking—as we painfully do every Monday in an attempt to come up with story ideas. You know. Typical editor stuff.

We began a particular discussion: Pushing back labels—feminism, separatism, activism, sexism, classism, racism—we attempted to peer beneath and uncover where lesbians are in 1990—not necessarily in a strictly political sense, but where they are emotionally, sexually, personally.

As with most things, this exchange unfortunately led to still more labels. At a magazine, where cover lines, headlines, subheads, photo captions and pull quotes are paramount, that is bound to happen. Someone randomly came up with the term “Modern Lesbian” as a working title. But then it stuck—simply because the five contributors whom we assigned to write on the subject took to the term itself, either by embracing it or by attacking it.

In her piece, “Sister to Brother: Women of Color on Coming Together with Men,” Eva Yaa Asantewaa points out that “a piece on ‘the Modern Lesbian’ struck a nerve in most of the sisters I interviewed...‘It’s typical that [a man] would be interested in these things,’ a young, African-American lesbian told me.” (It should be pointed out that the OutWeek board of editors—which decided upon this topic—is made up of men and women.) Madam X, in “Her Royal Hypeness,” initiates an all-out assault on “the Modern Lesbian,” or rather, the use of the term as a stereotyping tactic, declaring, “I refuse to fit into a new category” (although some label mongers might argue that this kind of individualism is, in itself, a quality of the “Modern Lesbian”).

“Wandering Through Herland” is Maria Maggenti’s personal journey, grappling with feminism, AIDS activism and working with gay men, and the resulting conflicts that arise. Patsy Lynch, in “Lesbian Ladies,” visits a support group for femme lesbians in Washington D.C., one of many which have lately sprung up across the country. And in “Desperately Seeking C.C.,” Jill Adams takes us on a zany, emotional roller coaster ride—a night out, cruising the scene and looking for Ms. Right.

Wandering through Herland
by Maria Maggenti

The cover of the Newsweek magazine article says “The Future of Gay America” and the picture is of two white men holding hands. I scramble madly through the glossy pages to try and find the paragraphs that mention lesbians. Oh gee, there we are! In a sidebar—white, “married,” lesbian couples with children in Columbus, Ohio mumbling something about their semi-closeted existence and their conventionally constructed relationships. The world Newsweek notices is not the world of On Our Backs, Pat Califia, Girls Bars and out-and-proud dykes with a long, complicated and varied history of existence. It says “The Future of Gay America,” but once again, we are somehow shadowy, unknowable, invisible, unthinkable. There is one quote from a young woman who makes the statement that she represents that growing element of the lesbian community who wear make up and feminine clothes and call themselves “lipstick lesbians or girlie girls.” I think to myself that this cress distillation of the struggles that exist in our communities about who we are as lesbians are not so simple as who wears lipstick to be beautiful and who doesn’t. I think to myself that Newsweek magazine has missed the boat on lesbians and then I wonder, well, what boat should they have been on anyway?

I do know that things are different now. But it is all liquid, waves breaking over and over again in my face. I try to come up with things “lesbian” and I feel as though I am in the back of a cab staring out the window. The driver is going really fast down the East River Drive at dusk and I know I am looking at Manhattan but all I get are the shapes, some colors; people are speaking in different languages. This is my home but I can’t tell where my house is.

I remember chiding men in ACT UP over and over when they said GAY this or GAY that and women would have to interject, “do you mean GAY AND LESBIAN or GAY MEN?” and there would be a moment of collective mental shuffling, as though the axis of the earth had just been tilted to an extreme angle. Sheepishly there would be a reorganization of the sentence and an attempt at clarity and sooner or later those men with some seniority never made that faux pas again. In that hothouse called AIDS activism, where I spent two and a half steamy years screaming, getting my butt kicked, and loving gay men for the first time, I experienced things that lesbian-feminism had not prepared me for and I discovered that without that feminism I never could have lasted so long in a community made up of so many men. Feminism did not teach me about that delicious, outrageous, queer decadence indulged in by gay men as a survival strategy. So I danced about in my leather jacket and helped gay-boy friends zip up the backs of their goofy dresses as we marched off to close down the stock exchange. But feminism gave me a political discipline that was sometimes more useful than drag. Feminism kept me from thinking that “Robert’s Rules of Order” are a true form of human communication that white racism can be eliminated by saying “people of color” all the time. Feminism, and lesbian-feminism in particular, created a world where only a desert had existed before and though I had long since given up romanticizing the “life,” I felt proud of it anyway.

As I look back on it now I see the difficult place I was in—almost as though I was standing on an island and there are the other lesbians standing on islands too. And there are our brothers. Gee, guess what? They are standing together on the mainland. I have one arm extended to ward off gay male sexism and another arm extended to keep away lesbian parochialism; the kind that says “be this way, women, or else.” The men are friendly and seem to take me for who I am, the women are suspicious, judgmental, critical. But the men don’t seem to understand what I’m talking about half the time. What do you think I am anyway, some straight-girl flag-hag? And the women understand what I’m talking about but hate my ego, my clothes, my swaying butt when I walk. This island, where I stand myself, it is a sometimes lonely and surreal place to be.

So feminism is dead, or it has changed or it is still meaningful to some of us but its political currency in the world is weak, its radical heart excised, its plodding middle-class moderation now an acceptable way of life. Feminism has been absorbed by the same generation that so proudly claims to reject it and instead of women’s liberation I hear “long live the queer nation!” Then there are these “girl bars” with big-breasted women wearing strap-on dildos bending over so I can see their crotches as they dance to mean, loud music. Standing next to me are two women, a couple. They are wearing button-down shirts and Silence=Death buttons on their knapsacks. They share an apartment in Park Slope, own a cat, they’ve been in couple counseling, they move in a world of women like themselves and try not to let people smoke in the house. One of them grins at me as the go-go girl does a slow grind down on her knees teasing her nipples with her rose red fingernails, sticking her round ass in the air. "Well, this sure is a long way from women's reading groups, isn't it?" she laughs. I imagine that she and I have the same books on our bookshelves, the ones that get a printing of 1,500 but somehow it seems like everyone you know has read them. Then I am reminded of a former lesbian roommate, a few years younger than I, whose acquaintance with things feminist elicited little but a kind of glazed-over incomprehension. "Boys, girls, girls, boys," her like seemed to say, "as long as we're all queer and proud what's the big deal?" ("But we need to be for us," I would say in my head, "women as women, lesbians as lesbians, no one else cares about us except us. How can we be proud if we can't even see each other half the time? The boys are always in the foreground. Oh, there we are, I spy, a couple of dykes in the scenery over that guy's shoulder.")

I read things about lesbians and by lesbians in a vain attempt to know something about us. I cruise women on the street and wear a pink triangle on my coat lapel when I ride the subway. No one ever seems to return my meaningful stares except gay men who smile broadly and straight male pervers who interrupt my line of vision. I snort out loud about reproductive rights dismissing any discussion that doesn't include lesbian sexual freedom and fight with dykes who say that AIDS isn't "our" issue. If it says "women" I am skeptical—do they mean lesbians too or does that mean lesbians only? And why do we still say women when we mean lesbians? The new code is "girls." When I see the word girls it usually means lesbians. I laugh about the screaming fights I would have with male strangers who called me a girl when I was 20 years old. Now I give them the finger, smile and say, "lezzie, you asshole.

A bunch of us, faggots and dykes, are hanging out at my house drinking Rolling Rock and telling stories. Somehow or another my girlfriend and I begin laughing hysterically about the covers of lesbian novels from Naad Press. How ugly and unappealing they are to a potential buyer, god, where is the art direction, how does the writer feel about those graphics, jeez? When one of the men joins in, we turn and say, "Listen, we can laugh at ourselves but you can't." My male friend has that look that I have seen on gay men's faces before—a kind of fearful, shameful and indignant look that says, "Hey, I'm a sister too!" It's like this: I can say whatever I want about my mother but you can't, get it? It's like this: we bust our asses learning all about you and your lives, what you read, how you talk, who's who in the gay male universe, how you can fuck safely man-to-man, get it? What do you really know about us? What kind of effort have you made? (In my head, I can hear the voices chanting: manhater, separatist.) We part easily, as true friends do when there is a disagreement, and later that week he calls to ask to borrow some of my books. Boys.

_Newsweek_ didn't miss the boat it missed a whole flotilla. There we are paddling along, a whole million billion of us: lesbians, dykes, lezzies, bulldaggers, girle girls. It is my body that remembers what my mind forgets—all those soft lips, those rough fingers and swaying hips, a tongue on my thigh and easily holding hands in places where no one expects to see two lesbians being lovers. I think about how I want to be as out at Lincoln Center as I am at the Duchess. I remember being called a classist, imperialistic, bourgeois pig when I mentioned that I loved opera to a woman in a women's studies class. I try to put words to those exquisite throbbing moments of women dancing close to me at Carmelita's on a Friday night. A broadbacked woman with rippling muscles raises her arms up and the hair in her armpits is glistening with sweat. Her eyes are closed, she is feeling it, she almost looks like a boy, but those hips, those legs. She is exquisitely beautiful. Maybe I have had too many beers or it is that girl's hands running up and down my ass, but at that moment I think being a lesbian is the most glorious thing in the world. I forget about _Newsweek_ about how invisible we are, about all the fights we have with each other, about how we are and how we should be.

My feet are burning. I remember all those women who walked out on me, calmly returned the keys to my apartment while drinking a beer at my kitchen table; how they left because they wanted to fuck a new girl. They weren't sure about getting so close, they just didn't want to be in a relationship anymore. My chest is on fire. There is my best friend in bed with her new lover a thousand miles away listening to me cry over and over about how this is it, I am going straight now, at least I could boss a man around and not feel so bad when he left me, and my best friend listens and listens. My hands tingle. It is the first time we've touched and her skin is cool and silky, like taffeta. I wonder if I will know her long enough to memorize her face. My face is hot. We are the only lesbian AIDS activists in the place and we both smoke. We declare eternal love and friendship on the spot. My eyes are wet. It is Gay and Lesbian Pride Day and god, there are so many women here and they look so sexy and everyone is sweating and holding hands. I think I will burst.

There we all are moving swiftly forward. We all seem to be going in different directions. But no one paddles backwards. Everything that rises, I say to myself, everything that rises, I sing to myself, everything that rises must converge.

Lesbian Ladies
(or where did all the femmes go?)
by Patsy Lynch

The flyer was Mary Kay pink. "Lesbian Ladies Society" it read next to an illustration of a Victorian Woman dressed in a bonnet and umbrella. It was enough to make me clutch my flannel shirt protectively and wipe the sweat off my blue jeans. With some trepidation I picked up the phone and dialed the number listed on the flyer.

Cynthia Yockey answered the phone and agreed to meet with me. Being a victim of fashion inertia, I finally found the "right outfit" and left for the interview. Ms. Yockey could be called Washington, D.C.'s Jeanne D'Arc of dress-wearing dykes. The 36-year-old is a tireless crusader against the stigma that, she feels, is attached to lesbians who wear skirts. True to form, she went back to wearing dresses and found that she enjoyed it. "I had been reading articles about what makes a woman straight or gay: Clothing seemed to be important. I thought it rather silly for someone to tell me how I should dress to be a real woman. I am a real woman and a lesbian. I will decide how I dress and behave."

When Yockey moved to Washington in 1983, she again encountered attire phobia. "There seems to be a 'dress code' which is rigidly followed. Because I wear feminine attire, I was disowned, even persecuted, by this community. I'd rather be alone than tolerate this abuse."

The following year Yockey met her lover, and together they made one more attempt at sharing lesbian fellowship. Again, her dress got in the way.

Yockey decided to form a group which would meet her needs.

She put notices in the weekly gay newspaper, and was surprised by the response. "I expected ten to 15 women. We had over 50 calls. We held meetings at my house. I tried to have discussion topics, but I found women were more interested in socializing." As the group has grown, Yockey incorporated it and now charges a membership fee and dues.

She also has rules and regulations which, she says, have caused misunderstandings and controversy. Rule number one: women must wear a dress or skirt to meetings. Rule number two: only biological females are permitted to attend. "In the early years, we allowed transsexuals, but the other women felt uncomfortable. I decided that only 'real' women could join."

Who would have thought that a dress could cause so much controversy? Yockey claims that since starting her group, she has received hate calls and threatening letters. "I think there are some lesbians who are really masculine in their orientation. Those lesbians feel that they are the spokeswomen for the entire community. For feminine lesbians, this is an avenue we cannot follow, and therefore do not!"

Hearing Ms. Yockey make this statement, I found myself clutching my shirt, a nice comfortable t-shirt with the logo "Girl Scout gone bad" on the front. I thought about all those meetings that I had attended as a young and oh-so-innocent dyke, where the clothes seemed to reflect the current trend of the community. Most of those women were concerned about creating a society where women would be free to express themselves without the influence of men. I found myself being challenged for maintaining the then-detestable notion that men could be our friends. Funny how far the world has come, I thought. I am interviewing a woman who insists that she is the spokesperson for the "feminine lesbian."

Yockey says that about 20 percent of the Lesbian Ladies Society are Black, with the rest equally divided between whites, Latinos and other ethnic groups. They range in age between 20 and 60, and have blue or pink collar jobs. She thinks that most professional lesbians are either too involved in their careers to have a social life, or are in fact masculine-oriented dykes who only wear dresses out of necessity.

If Ms. Yockey's current book proposal is successful, the dress-wearing lesbian movement will soon have its own manifesto. She hopes that dress-wearing cells will spring up around the "lesbian nation" and indeed across the world. After all, she says, there are a lot of lesbians who enjoy being a girl. These women, now isolated and lonely, are hungry to learn about the movement. Ms. Yockey will bring them the good news. She is a woman with a mission.
Sister to Brother
Women of Color on Coming Together with Men
by Eva Yaa Asantewaa

What becomes a lesbian of color most? Independence. So much so that my editor's concept of a piece on "The Modern Lesbian" struck a nerve in most of the sisters I interviewed—and in me as well. Have we dispensed with the rules for how to be "correct" in our physical appearance, in our sexual expression, in our working relationships and friendships with men? With the exception of one woman who cheerfully described a dressing style that could encompass flannel shirts, sundresses and an occasional tux, everyone laughed off the fashion-magazine topics. "It's typical that a man would be interested in those things," a young African-American lesbian told me. Instead, they eagerly embraced the question about meaningful interactions with men.

Has any lesbian worth the name limited herself to anyone's idea of how she should look or behave? or how she should answer an interviewer? The lesbian clone is an illusion; a figment of her own and a homophobe's fevered imagination; a temporary aberration. Let's be done with her. Each lesbian a self-made woman; each a unique treasure to be discovered! This is the spice of lesbian life.

For sisters of color, this is especially true, and it may be one of the reasons there seems to be a desire to share this healthy sense of identity with our gay brothers.

In the white lesbian and gay community, there's an awareness that the battle against AIDS has drawn concerned men and women together. For Latina and African-American lesbians and gay men, the homophobia within our native communities and the racism within the overall lesbian and gay community can create additional points around which to dialogue and act as a unit. But, we're not always talking about the negative as a starting point. Poet Dorothy Randall Gray speaks of the basic connection between lesbians and gay men of African heritage as "an extension of Afrocentric beliefs, truths that are stronger than our sexuality," an affirmation of our common culture. There is, she says, a need to bond with our male counterpart, based on a sharing of experiences.

I gathered some other spontaneous thoughts on the issue of male-female coalition from several admired African-American and Latina lesbians from the New York City community.

Dorothy Randall Gray:
A member of the Stations Collective.
Admits to liking magenta lipstick and purple eyeliner.

"Gays and lesbians of color are more predisposed to coming together, less separatist, more open-spirited and willing to share. In recent years, I've seen more events—the Pat Parker memorial reading, the Kwanza celebrations—involving gay men and women of color. There have always been men at performances of Stations.

"Of course, not every gay male of color welcomes women's participation with open arms. Sometimes, there's a disrespect not based on sexuality or color but style. Why do lesbians dress down and look plain? I don't know of any derogatory term that lesbians have for gay men, but 'mermaid' is the term gay men have for us. That shows some underlying hostility. On the other hand, when they see a lesbian with a lot of flair and dynamism, they say, 'We want to be with you. In fact, we want to be you!'

"Lesbians, who have the lowest rates of HIV-positive status and AIDS-related illnesses, have committed to fighting AIDS in great numbers. I haven't seen any corresponding activism on the part of gay men in the fight for abortion and the right for a woman to control her own body.

"There's a feeling lesbians get when they walk into a room full of women. Our gay brothers are just beginning to get that feeling of bonding, the kind of pride they felt when they walked in the Harlem Day Parade where they knew the Black community might be hostile. In African-American history, women held the community together while men were finding their strength. Since Black gay males have not yet resolved what can make them strong, they admire (as well as resent) our strength. Wherever outreach has happened, it's because lesbians have made the effort to say, 'come on in, brothers.'"

Coral Inza:
Hails from the Bronx. Says lesbians have more clothing alternatives than straight women. She likes to take advantage of that but hates to shop.

"Among other things I've done in the community, I've joined the coalition to get people of color on the board of the Lesbian and Gay Community Center, and I work with gay men of color in that effort. I find it enriching. What we cannot do alone, we can do collectively even if the issues within our spectrum differ.

"I appreciate gay men's directness. They can be adamant, but I'd rather have that. Sometimes with women, I feel I'm doing dental work.

"Working with lesbians of color has reinforced my identity and the direction of my life. Being around women who are powerful in themselves helps me get the work done, and you know it can get tiring—this upstream battle to assert who we are. Working with gay men of color offers a balance as both sides work through their disagreements and differences."

Dionne Freeneyp

Directs the Youth Enrichment Services program at New York's Lesbian and Gay Community Services Center. Has been a member of Lavender Light Black and People of All Colors Choir for the past nine months.

"Women and men should work together, but there are times when it's appropriate to be apart because you need that space. I definitely think male energy is different from female energy.

"There's a 90:10 ratio, male to female, in the YES program, but that's very much in the nature of the Center. We have a lot of male images [in the artwork exhibited throughout the Center]. A lot of women come in and don't feel comfortable.

"Men will always have privilege no matter who they are, and that crosses color lines. They've got more books, more power, and more men are out.

"Lavender Light is a democracy. We all work together and have close friendships, male and female, all colors. We share responsibility and power."

Mariana Romo-Carrona:

Member of Las Buenas Amigas, an organization of Latina lesbians.

"I didn't start working with gay men until very recently because there wasn't a format in which I felt it was propitious to work together. I did have Black gay male friends who were more comfortable to deal with than white gay men. With Latino gay men, things didn't click because of issues of class or hierarchical structure. I didn't feel comfortable being represented by them.

"Since then, a steering committee of lesbians and gay men of color was formed from a town meeting held at the Community Center. Other Latino groups—Boricua Gay and Lesbian Forum and HUGL—have emerged. Latino gays and lesbians marched together in the Puerto Rican Day parade and, for the first time, appeared on a television program together. Working with men has been satisfactory. They have been receptive and not at all overpowering.

"Sometimes men have attended Las Buenas Amigas' events, and some women have felt uncomfortable. Others feel comfortable. Since it is hard to get space just for ourselves, we find that we do have to prioritize. But we will do some events with the men.

"Specific friendships with individual men can work out, but, when you work in groups, you find the sexism of Latino culture. It's easier to deal with—and dismiss—the assumptions of white men. But Latino gay brothers are our own people. We have an investment in the success of these coalitions.

"What's positive is how we approach the straight Latino community—which is threatened by us. Seeing a lesbian on a talk show, they try to order her world. 'She doesn't look like a lesbian. She might be straight.' We can use the opportunity to show them a viable alternative of how men and women can be together."

Candice Boyee:

Member of the board of African American Women United for Societal Change (formerly Salsa-Soul Sisters).

"There is a division between lesbians and gay men because of sexism. In Atlanta at the recent National Black Gay and Lesbian Leadership Conference, gay men admitted that they were raised as men and had certain sexist attitudes about women. Now, they are trying to reach out to us. They need the help of women who have experience in coming together in coalition.

"I haven't yet seen that the men's groups have reciprocated to the women's groups' invitations. 'Salsa' has recently begun inviting men to facilitate one of its weekly workshops, one per month. About five men showed up for the first one. I attended a meeting of Gay Men of African Descent. It's been difficult to get women to go to their meetings.

"AIDS is definitely what has brought lesbians and gay men together, but we also have a enemy at the Center—white men. That's what brings us into a common frame. We have to stick together when they discriminate against us.

Personally, I have good connections with gay men of color. Being far away from home [at the Atlanta conference], we had to support each other, and we brought back some of that good energy."

Clearly, our shared history of multiple oppressions makes any effort to stand together complicated. For that matter, is it any different when the combination is woman to woman or man to man? Reaching out to others seems to call first for reaching into ourselves—and liking and respecting what we find there. It is not a simple task but one which my sisters of color seem to welcome as we move into a new decade of struggle, creativity and love.
I'm quite sure that it all began at the age of seven. That's when I learned that by dry-humping my Snoopy stuffed animal, I could make my vagina tingle and throb. I don't think this can be construed as bestiality, yet I still felt, by society's standards, my behavior was impure and perverse. As time passed, I grew tired of my secret love affair with Snoopy. I was eager to engage in the act, with someone a little less submissive. Someone less predictable, someone human, perhaps.

So much for flashbacks. We're now in the 90s, and darlings, I have arrived. I don't know who to thank, genetics or my environment, or Snoopy for that matter, but with no aid from any therapist, I've come to understand that I'm perfectly gay. Yes, as in happy, yes as in homosexual. I'm real proud of my diversion, but to be totally honest, I didn't pursue her enthusiastically enough.

As of my diversion, but to be totalement honest, I didn't pursue her enthusiastically enough. Of course, I realized this after the fact. The point is, I'll never be fulfilled unless I find her again. But how? I know only her first name. There's only one solution. No! Not Miss Right, that is. Only the problem is, I didn't know who to thank, genetics or my environment, or Snoopy for that matter, but with no aid from any therapist, I've come to understand that I'm perfectly gay. Yes, as in happy, yes as in homosexual. I'm real proud of my diversion, but to be totally honest, I didn't pursue her enthusiastically enough. Of course, I realized this after the fact. The point is, I'll never be fulfilled unless I find her again. But how? I know only her first name. There's only one solution. No! Not another night at the meat market. That's right punky! Come on, no time to waste, let's go! I could use a little moral support.

Boy it's crowded tonight. Tight space. I guess you have no choice but to rub by everybody you pass. By no means am I complaining. Actually it feels kind of good, especially when they're facing you. Try not to stare, but would you give a look, over by the jukebox. A couple of horny diesel dykes, lustfully grinding and performing cunnilingus over each others jeans. I didn't know they have live entertainment here. So uninhibited. Get down witch-ya bad selves ladies. You know, any minute, Miss Thing is gonna get real excessive, strap it on, and give us a real performance. Oh, I could watch this shit for days. Robin Byrd, eat your heart out girlfriend.

Hey look, over there in the showcase. It's a blowup of our gal pal Sandra Burn-Heart, my secret celebrity desire. Very feminine, in a classic Billy Idol pose. Corner of her lip turned up, and her hand in a fist, real tough like. I heard she comes around, every so often. Sure, I've met her before, only I haven't had the good fortune of turning her out. Leaves her case still open to the jury, huh?

God, would you look at all these broads clutching on to each other for dear life. So territorial. Please ladies, loosen up, don't be so insecure. I'm not interested in your possessive exclusivity. Monogamy is not my bag.

Oh, there's a classic couple over there for you, at the end of the bar. Role playing that is so contrived and unnatural, that I may just regret it, at the sight of it. The characters in this performance are referred to as "Butch and Femme." I am the provider in this relationship, therefore I look, dress and act like Mike Tyson. Now I ask you, is this necessary? Norman Rockwell must be turning in his grave from this portrait. Nice going ladies, set us back a couple hundred years, why don't ya. Go on, keep legitimizing the stereotypes. That's it, I'm out of here... Come on, give it just a few more hours, it's early, she still might show. Be optimistic.

OOOOO! Who the hell is that? She is gorgeous. What's she doing here? That's terrible, I'm sorry, I take that back. Would you check out that tired lookin' babe, trying to make the moves on her. Give her some air, jeez. I walk over to where they're talking, to catch some of the conversation. Well, I might have guessed. She's got a boyfriend. Uh huh. It's her night out with the girls. Uh huh. This is her first time in a gay bar. Uh huh. First time this week maybe. She, my friends, is what is known in the community as 'THE EXPERIMENTOR,' so beware. You've just got to know the kind. They get drunk...they lure you to seduce them...you follow through as proficient as ever...they get off... don't want to know the first thing about reciprocating... you both go to sleep... you wake up and your first instinct is to "reach out and touch"... and theirs is to get dressed and go. Now that's cold. How can people be so selfish? I'm leaving. No! Just a while longer. She said that she comes here almost every Saturday night. OK. A little while longer. God I hope she comes.

Hello, hello! Look at those two dripping hot Latinas dancing! The one with the dimples keeps batting her eyelashes at me. Mmmmmm... I could do the two of them, but if I were only able to get my mind off this woman.

Where could she be tonight? Oh no!
Maybe she reunited with her ex-lover from the past 15 years. She said the relationship was on the rocks, but with the coming of the new year, and with all the memories and reflecting that one does during the Holiday, maybe they found a renewed love. Please god, tell me it’s not true.

Out of nowhere, this Jacket and Tie number practically assails me at the bar. Ultra assertive. I was distracted by all the buttons on her lapel. Pro-choice, Silence Equals Death, Gloria Steinem for President. I could tell that she was real political, and I was already feeling pretty tired. I made up my mind that I was going to be genuine, but complacent. I was in no mood for adversity. Contrary to my prejudgment, this cross-dresser turns out to be wicked cerebral. Stimulating even. So we continued to talk until....

Oh Jesus, there she is. Oh shit, it’s dark and I’m near-sighted, but I think that’s her. Heaven help me, my heart just leaped out of my chest and up into my throat, I can’t breathe. Mellow out, calm down, relax. You’re overreacting. She’s just a person. Yeah, the coolest, sexiest, most wonderful person of my dreams. Look no further baby, I’m right over here. Take me in your arms, a person of my dreams. Look no further baby, she’s just a person. Breathe. Mellow out, calm down, relax. I can’t believe I’m calculating what it is I’m going to say. This isn’t me, I usually don’t care, but only the best for Miss Right. How about something original? I can’t think, my mind is a blank. Would you stop intellectualizing this already. Get yourself in check. Just be your smooth suave self. O.K. here goes...

Oh shit, piss and corruption! All worked up and it’s not her? For Christ’s Sake! Not even close! Make a note to see the optometrist on Monday. Ain’t that a bitch.

So much for optimism. It doesn’t look like she’s showing. And I just realized that I’ve been conversing with this macro-biotic lookin’ bohemian babe all the time I’ve been anticipating the confrontation of this woman. Why is she totally unaware of this? Because she’s a classic New Yorker. She’s been talking about herself, to herself. All I can think about, is how badly I would like to take this one home, and Jolen the shit out of her.

I’m so overjoyed that I came. Another eventful night out. Got to go. “I love you all, don’t ever change.” Get me out of here. Did I think I’m any lonelier? Is it possible?

Oh, air, finally. Toxic in quality, but air nonetheless. I must find this woman. She must know how I feel, how desperately I am in love. But what if she rejects me? Don’t take it personally, get a referral. Ha! Ha! Oh it hurts. How the hell am I going to find her, when all I know is her first name. What would my mentor and guiding light, Madonna, do in a situation like this? The personalists! The Modern Lesbian Way to get things done... Of, Course.

DESPERATELY SEEKING C.C.
Please find me because I love you.
I won't be embarrassed in their company, and by lesbians who are finally making enough money to embrace a lifestyle popularized years ago by the same people they used to despise. The nightclubber guy as role model, well I'd say...

I heard the Modern Lesbian has a solid background in feminist theory, she knows her ancestry (ancestresses?), is politically involved (in ACT UP preferably). Read: the Modern Lesbian is a middle class woman who could afford an education. Nothing new there. What's new is that this educated woman is "modern," and we know what that means: Better. Better than the hoi polloi who works her ass off in the Bronx? (Oh yes, the Modern Lesbian fucks the boroughs.)

I heard the Modern Lesbian understands that working with men is necessary. Alright, yes it is, no doubt about it. But now, I want to see Modern Gay Men who put women's issues on their agenda, and who, keeping in mind that breast cancer is a plague for women, demand a global health system reform, to give but one example. I think we gave a lot in this deal, and what did we get?

I heard the Modern Lesbian is now more stylish (this whole issue involves a lot of war painting, what does it mean?) In fact, her options seem to be limited to two choices, according to the Modern Gay & Lesbian Press (of which this very magazine is a prime example): the urban tomboy and the ultra-feminine seductress. After going through the 70s lesbians are now supposed to catch up and be whatever they want to be, wear whatever they want to wear—e.g. make-up isn't an object of contempt anymore. I, for one, am deeply relieved about this, if only for purely selfish and aesthetic reasons. On the other hand, I hate seeing dykes blindly embracing values that were not built for them but against them. I hate it when, on my biannual visit to the Cubby Hole, I watch all these monstrously cute women dancing the night away on tepid disco that perpetuates an image of women as sex kittens (and by the way, do you find it right that the video jukebox there has notorious homophobes Sam Kinison and Guns 'n' Roses on it?).

I truly loathe the 80s world of superficiality, consumerism and return to traditional ideas. That's why I have very mixed feelings about this very white, very middle-class, very "educated" idea of the Modern Lesbian that's supposed to represent all of us.

So to get back to my initial point, made a long time ago, in a far, far away galaxy, I refuse to fit in a new category, dictated by someone else, to tell me what to act like. Say it again, I'm bland and I'm proud.

But today this anti-style has progressed among hetero women: Wearing no make-up and having short hair, being generally androgynous aren't any more a sure way to indicate lesbians especially in urban areas. On the other hand, the "lesbian community" is more heterogenous than ever: rural separatists, trendy urban ACT UP dykes (last time I had torn jeans was when I got caught in a subway turnstile), Park Slopers who exercise (exercise?) their libido at the women's martial arts school and then rush to the fascist food co-op ("Yes, there's another meeting you have to attend, don't contradict us, you revisionist"), and Susie Bright, in a category all by herself.

The Modern Lesbian, who's all that at once, can cook nouvelle cuisine and read Foucault at the same time, plays a mean racket ball before she goes to a meeting, wears make-up and jeans, and says it loud: "I'm hip and I'm proud."

Frankly, this whole hype looks suspicious to me, dreamed up and advertised both by some guys who are happy to find (at long last!) lesbians dressed well enough so they
Including images of gay and lesbian activists, the large wall mural on Charles Street at the West Side Highway seems to vindicate OutWeek's recent Malcolm Forbes cover story.

DISNEY SHOCKER: MINNIE AND MICKEY'S MARRIAGE OF CONVENIENCE

While He Was Tinkering Tinkerbell, She Was Dancing In Little Girls' Dreams.

—Sarah Pettit
Dear The Experts:

In response to your query, although I never actually dated Bradley Ball, I did happen to be in the same restaurant where he was having dinner with some disreputable Establishment types one night. At least I'm pretty sure it was him. In real life he looks considerably older than his photograph. Anyway, right there in public for the whole world to see, he took out this fistful of pills and capsules—anti-depressants, no doubt—and washed them down with a clear liquid—gin, no doubt. I was, of course, shocked by such a brazen exhibition of substance abuse, but everyone else acted like it was the most natural thing in the world. No wonder our community's in such bad shape. Thank God you people are working to expose this menace. I hope I can do my part with this letter, but please don't use my real name.

—Saw It With My Own Eyes

Dear The Experts:

In response to your query, although I never actually dated Bradley Ball, it certainly wasn't for his lack of trying. We were introduced by a former mutual friend at a fundraiser, and he fell instantly in love with me. All night long, whenever I turned around, he always seemed to be lurking nearby like some shark circling its prey. At one point, he slithered up and said he was leaving and asked if I wanted his drink tickets! It was so embarrassing, I didn't know where to look. Then a few nights later, I went downstairs to Tower Records, and there he was—pretending to examine a compact disc of Die sieben Todsünden. I got out before he spotted me, but the very next day, I ran into him on the street just a few blocks from my apartment. I'd had enough of this harassment, so I told him gently but firmly that I could never in a billion years feel the same way for him as he did for me, even if he were the last man on earth, so would he do us both a great big favor and leave me the fuck alone. He walked away looking hurt and confused, but I guess that did the trick, because I never saw him again. Later, I heard he'd taken the rejection badly and was usually seen mixing anti-depressants with gin, and that's probably too bad, but hell, I have to lead my own life. Please don't print my real name; I couldn't stand it if this nightmare started up all over again.

According to a WPIX report by anchorwoman Sheila Steinbeck last week, STRAIGHT PEOPLE are actually reading OutWeek. She even called us "required reading."

So, as a public service to our new readers, we have thoughtfully compiled...A HETEROSEXUAL'S GUIDE TO OUTWEEK:

1) When someone calls you a "gay" or a "dyke" when they see you reading it on the subway, the proper response is: "If you don't like queers, then ride another line."

2) Do not—REPEAT—DO NOT venture into the personal ads. What you read may scar you for life.

3) Remember: What we say about Liz Smith is only between us queers. DO NOT tell other straight people about it.

4) When people at the office accidentally see the magazine on your desk, pick it up fast and put it under your arm. Then tell them it's a magazine all about "going out," like to dinner, and movies and stuff "Outweek, get it?"...Then run out of there quickly.

5) If you start feeling just a bit horny, and you start looking at that hot thing across the room—who happens to be the same sex as you are...STOP READING THE MAGAZINE IMMEDIATELY AND DON'T PICK IT UP AGAIN. You're obviously an impressionable straight person.

By Michelangelo Signorile

A reader once wrote a letter to the editor here asking if this is really the same column every week except with the UPPER CASE letters switched around a bit. (Cute.)

I'm actually starting to believe it myself. (Frightening.)

It's just that, as with anything, we go round and round and fall back on the same people—the same victims and the same victimizers. I guess that's where we get the term 'The Usual Suspects.'

Anyway (this is the segue), this thing with Chastity Bono is getting completely out of hand. It's a sad circus of events that could really mean a huge, resounding crash is imminent for the child of Cher.

First, let's flesh out the facts. As I'm sure everyone remembers, Star's magazine, a few months ago, said that Chastity is a lesbian, something people in the queer community knew for quite some time. Though the story was, for Star, quite sensitive in the way it was reported, its motivations were homophobic: Star was revealing Chastity's homosexuality because they were pissed off at Cher, whose ex-boyfriend Rob Camiletti, had once allegedly beat her lover, the media will go wild, of course, and would do anything to have a better scoop—even if that means reporting that Chastity is actually straight. street and confiscated the film.

So, after Star's revelations, the Enquirer printed its phony story, Cher got on Entertainment Tonight and denied her daughter's homosexuality, Cher's publicist at PMK set Chas up with a "beard" to be her boyfriend for the sake of photographers and Chas went back into the closet—but only as far as one could go after being so wrenched out.

Now Page Six (New York Post) had a story last week which again opens that silly closet door. It's all about how Chas and the woman everyone says is her lover, Heidi Shink (who is a member of her band), clashed with a photographer who was trying to get a photo of them. Geffen Records' director of publicity, Lisa Barbaris, kept trying to get between the women outside the Cat Club last week. When the photographer got some shots anyway, Cher's lawyer, Fred Davis, chased him down the come to terms with your daughter's lesbianism—at least not in public. What you should be doing is nurturing her and taking a strong stand against homophobes; WHAT YOU SHOULD BE DOING IS HOLDING A PRESS CONFERENCE TO ANNOUNCE CHASTITY'S LESBIANISM AND HOW NORMAL IT IS.

"We're trying to develop an image of this band," says Geffen publicist Lisa Barbaris. "This has nothing to do with her sexual preference. If it is true [that she is a lesbian] then I wish she'd actually take a stand because it would make my life a lot easier."

She's right. It would probably make everyone's life a lot easier including Chastity's and lots of queers. But it's hard to believe that a publicist at Geffen—where the president of the company is a goddammned closet case—would urge its performers to
Out on the Town

With Liz and Sydney

by Liz Tracey and Sydney Pokornyi

Liz: Lesbian week in New York City, September 1-9, 1990. You would think every week should be lesbian week, but as it is, we can't even get an hour on cable. So with this announcement, our overheated little minds set to work finding ideas on how to celebrate our unique position in this society, and the cultural heritage we inherit; remembering, of course, that there is more to being a lesbian than a bad haircut.

Sydney: Not all lesbians have bad haircuts, thank you. Since Liz and I are actually separate people, each with our own opinions, we did not always agree on a particular event. Therefore, we each proposed alternative events in the case of a dispute.

1. The Statue of Liberty is a lesbian! A reclaiming ceremony complete with incantations to the goddess, a healing circle and crystal exhibition will kick off lesbian week in NYC. (Please call the Lesbian Switchboard for ferry departure information.)

2. Make-up and Make-overs. Butch women will have the expertise of former Outweek cover girl, Urvashi Vaid.

Sydney: While fem women will be treated to a multi-media presentation by Patricia Field representatives, and lesbians for a day, Sister Coodie Ravoli (make-up) and Miss Perfidia (hair).

3. Robin Byrd, in a bold move, presents "Women for Women" with lesbian luminaries Susie Bright, Shelley Mars, Whitney Houston, Taylor Dayne (oops, the last two are straight, I forgot) and activist bald nightclub personality Pamela Sneed, each performing a strip tease act.

Liz: Pat Califia hosts a party with the Lesbian Sex Mafia at the Vault. (What more is there to say?)

5. Fun, Friends and Activities. A singles' cruise around Manhattan for all lesbians currently enrolled in support groups, 12-step programs and "women who love too much" groups. Note: those in couples therapy will be admitted on a "wait and see if they break up" basis.

6. Outlaw party. In an outlaw party, an entire crowd crashes a pre-determined place, much to the surprise and most times dismay of the staff and patrons. For lesbian week, we recommend the 7th Ave. station in Park Slope and the Pussycat Lounge on 53rd St. The Brooklyn party would include an open juice bar and tempeh and brown rice treats. The Pussycat Lounge speaks for itself. Please note: Adequate motorcycle parking is available adjacent to the lounge.

7. Fashion shows. A fashion show will be held at Wetlands. Models will display the latest in natural fiber and environmentally safe fashions. An alternative show exhibiting sex wear and uniforms from Underground Leathers at the Spike.

8. Lesbian co-parents at the Center; dykes bring your tykes. A workshop for mommies and mommies (and mommies to be). For those lesbians not interested in having children, but continuing to be a child, a special workshop on how to find a sugarmommy will be sponsored by the Lesbian Bankers Association. A cocktail reception will follow.

9. Look-alike contest. There will be only three categories for this contest. The first category will be to find a Taura Satana look alike. Tura Santana is the Russ Meyers "starlet" from Faster Pussy cat Kill, Kill. Taking into consideration the fact that few lesbians either 1) know who Tura Santana is or 2) look like Tura Santana; the category will be changed to a Louise Brooks look-alike contest. A Tracy Chapman or k.d. Lang look-alike soirée will round out the categories. The latter two will be limited to the first 100 who enter. Sign up early; first come, first served.

10. Liz: Take Back the Night March. The final event of lesbian week will be a march through the west side of Manhattan to protest violent crimes against lesbians.

Sydney: For the less politically minded, a Take Back the Nightlife "pub crawl" will be held. Of course, the inevitable melee will occur when those on the march storm the bars yelling, "Out of the bars and into the streets."

The new issue of Project X, the magazine which dares to tell the truth about the seamy side of nightlife, and, in fact, is the seamy side of nightlife, is out. We would like to take issue with one tiny but disturbing question in an otherwise fun magazine: "How many times have you tried to pick up a boy and found he's just an ugly lesbian?" We know (or at least hope) that this is a misprint and the corrected question is: "How many times have you tried to pick up a cute boy and found he's a cute lesbian?"

TUFF DYKES?
Two ladies from the cast

Soap on a Rope

Secret Passions. Directed by Steve Wilber. Produced by David Gadberry. Premiere spot and series to be aired on the Gay Cable Network. Check listings.

by Peter Bowen

"TELLY SOAP IS GAY SHOCKER," screams the headline from the British scandal sheet, The Sun, about David Gadberry's planned lesbian and gay cable soap opera, Secret Passions. The series will show, as the Sun tells us (their emphasis, not mine), "men KISSING and cuddling each other in bed after sex and gays trying to ADOPT a child," as well as actual "LESBIAN love scenes" and "gays DYING from AIDS." As typically British as the Sun's reporting is, it is ultimately not that different from much of the press that has surrounded the coming out of Secret Passions. Indeed, the planned lesbian/gay soap opera has itself become a soap opera.

Imagine this: A California gay playwright who turns to producing a gay soap opera after, as Gadberry tells us, "Bobby and I broke up." Threats by a local Orange County evangelical preacher, Lou Sheldon, of the Traditional Values Coalition, to shut down the production, and more threats from Rev. Donald Wildwon to turn his 400,000-plus American Family Association mailing list against potential advertisers if the show airs. Hints by the homophobic Goors Fund of sponsorship for the project, followed by retractions once the proposal is known. A flurry of newspaper articles and TV talk shows, each expressing degrees of curiosity and shock about the project. And finally, shadowy talks about the show being picked up by a national cable network.

Through all of this dubious publicity, Gadberry has heroically fought on to present a show whose heroic premise (to give a "realistic portrayal" of lesbians and gays) may ultimately prove ridiculous. The one-hour pilot, produced with only $9,000 and skeleton crew, details the exploits of gay and straight citizens from a Southern Californian community that looks remarkably like Gadberry's own Orange County. (The show's religious fanatic, Arthur Dimsdale, for example, seems modeled after Orange County's own Lou Sheldon, and one of the plot lines follows the actual public retraction of a gay rights bill in Irvine.) However odd it might appear to employ the format of soap opera—a genre which has traditionally depended on emphatically cardboard characters to produce its hysterical effects—in order to reveal the "reality" of gay life, it is less the vehicle than the tenor of this "opera" that makes Gadberry's claims about "positive role models" hard to listen to.

It is not simply that the show is bad (bad acting, bad production, bad writing), but that it operates on bad faith. Reversing the assimilation politics of a book like Kirk and Madsen's After the Ball, which advocated a public relations campaign that excluded the representation of any "fringe" gay groups, Passions seeks to win over its straight audience by creating unabashedly negative gay characters. In the pilot, there are two gay male couples and one lesbian relationship. As for the men, one involves a self-hating stud, Neal, who finishes having sex with his obsessive "boyfriend." (done, of course, with underwear on) by stealing money from his wallet and noting the lovely sentiment, "Why do all fags have to be such kiss-asses?" The other "love-making" scene involves a powerful and corrupt real estate investor who engages his masseuse to give him more than the full body rub-down. While the lesbians fare slightly better, their scene appears to be shot in different parts of town.

What is, of course, missing from these "realistic" scenes and from the show so far is any mention of AIDS. While hoping to quietly bring up the subject six or eight shows down the line, Gadberry doesn't want "to reinforce the idea that AIDS is a gay disease." Perhaps not, but AIDS is real issue for lesbians and gays, and the show's failure to even show condoms during the sex scenes indicates the degree to which the show denies its own reality. (The majority of the cast turns out in fact to be straight, and, according to Gadberry himself, many were "a little squeamish" doing the sex scenes.)

While attempting to portray openly lesbian and gay characters, the show nevertheless operates under the assumption...

Dish It Up

by Karl Soehnlein

You turn on the TV and find excerpts from the International Women's Day Video Festival. Or an analysis of U.S. government propaganda being broadcast into Cuba. Or footage of ACT UP protesting inside St. Patrick's Cathedral—shot by AIDS activists themselves. Yes, you are watching television. No, it's not ABC, NBC, CBS or even CNN. You've stumbled upon Deep Dish TV, the first national public access satellite network, and what you're seeing is typical Deep Dish fare.

"It's media for social change," explains Lorna Johnson, Deep Dish TV's Program Coordinator, and one of only two paid staff members at the network. "We really hope to use our programs to do something about these issues." The issues she's talking about range from AIDS to apartheid, from housing to homophobia, from reproductive rights to racism.

What makes Deep Dish unique is its structure. Independent video works on specific issues are solicited from around the country and then programmed into a 16-week season. Deep Dish then buys satellite time and beams the programs to cable companies. These companies, in turn, tape the shows to be shown on local public access stations—channels set aside for community efforts. It's a relatively inexpensive way for alternative media to reach large audiences.

The disadvantage of this strategy is that stations aren't paying for the programs, so there are no guarantees that they will get shown. "We ask them to program one hour a week in sequence, but they can program them however they want to," Johnson elaborates. "It's really at the discretion of the program coordinator at that particular station." In order to insure better scheduling, Johnson, with the help of volunteers, does extensive outreach, fostering contacts across the U.S.—networking, in the true sense of the word.

The biggest stumbling block is often the cable companies. Access stations who don't have their own satellite dishes are at the mercy of the larger cable stations, who control which programs get "downlinked.

Only once has this dynamic proved to be a problem and, unfortunately, but not surprisingly, the issue was homophobia. According to Catherine Saalfield, an independent video producer who works with the Paper Tiger Collective and DIVA TV, the radical gay content of John Greyson's videotape Angry Initiatives, Defiant Strategies "freaked out" the cable companies, and many didn't show it. They used the convenient excuse that they never taped it during its satellite transmission.

Because Deep Dish is basically powerless in such situations, Saalfield is working with Johnson and others to do more local outreach to communities. "We're trying to figure out a way to get as much info out to community centers so that they can put pressure on the cable companies to show the programs," explains Saalfield. Short of setting up regional offices around the country—which isn't financially feasible—this effort may be the network's best chance to reach the greatest number of viewers.

This season promises to be a provocative one. Ten programs are being screened on the repercussions of white supremacists' attempts to use public access to get their particular message across. The series was prompted by a situation in Kansas City, Missouri, where the city council shut down the public access station after the KKK tried to use it to promote their agenda. It's a complex issue, as Johnson sees it. "They're silencing the Klan but at the same time they're silencing their community when they take away public access." Among the contributors to this series is AIDS activist Ira Manhoff, who's Showdown in Atlanta was shot during a confrontation between white supremacists and AIDS activists at the 1988 Democratic Convention in Atlanta.

AIDS activism plays a prominent role in this season's offerings. DIVA TV, ACT UP's video team, has put together an extraordinary hour of their most recent work. Be A DIVA! includes footage from the Target City
FEELING LIKE A WOMAN, LOOKING LIKE A MAN—OR WAS IT...

Soul, Two Souls

Prelude To A Kiss. A play by Craig Lucas. Directed by Norman René. Circle Repertory Company. 99 Seventh Avenue South at West 4th Street. (212) 924-7100.

by Jim Provenzano

When you last fell in love, did you fall for the soul, the personality or just the body? Craig Lucas's Prelude to a Kiss, described as a comic fairy tale of love and misplaced spirits, is a study on the nature of truly knowing a person, especially a loved one. Lucas gives us a set of fallible and believable characters, while Norman René's subtle directorial touches keep the slightly unbelievable plot on track.

After meeting Rita (Mary-Louise Parker) at a party, Peter (Alec Baldwin) realizes that "the spell was cast." He is in love. A rush of romantic scenes, segued by smooth sound mixes of Soul II Soul, Toni Childs and mellow jazz instrumentals, makes their immediate attraction somewhat believable.

Before they make love, as Baldwin disrobes, (fear not, that wonderfully darkhaired chest is displayed a good bit), he talks directly to the audience in one of his character's frequent and engaging monologues. But Rita is despondent and obsessed about world crises to the point of insomnia. Nevertheless, they develop a pleasant relationship of similar favorites (Freud, schnitzels, Molson beer). Several times Peter asks Rita if she wants to get married. "Sure," she replies blithely, as if it were inevitable. Six weeks later the knot is tied.

After the ceremony, everyone applauds softly "...as if we'd made a good putt." The wedding is calm and ordinary until a strange old man (Bernard Hughes) arrives and asks to kiss the bride. After he does, little character slips occur and Rita gets a bit spacey, becoming an off-kilter Stepford wife.

On their honeymoon to Jamaica, while sunning on beach chairs, the newlyweds argue. Rita pleads that they just "enjoy life," while Peter tries to remind her of the political causes and other world problems she abandoned, as she did her career, immediately after their marriage. Although a bartender, she can't even remember the recipe for a Long Island Iced Tea. Peter responds, "Excuse me honey, but I'm freaking out." "I'm sorry I can't be what you want me to be," Rita retorts, "Maybe what you saw was never here at all."

On returning from vacation, Peter shares his worries with his best friend Taylor, played with a sexy relaxed flair by John Dossett. Taylor sluffs it off. By Act One's end, we wonder where the play will go. Will she grow into a Bush monster, while he wallows in leftist socially conscious insomnia?

Rita has, it turns out, been delivered into another body through the mishap of a fractured double wish. That Peter continues to faithfully love Rita for herself, ignoring that someone else is inside her body, results in some curious...

A Bitter Aftertaste

figurative maid was always stealing the imaginary silverware. It's so hard to get good help these days. It's even harder to empathize with the very rich.

Afterlife is the logical successor to Borrowed Time: life after the death of a lover. Paul Monette switches to fiction for this black comedy about three AIDS widowers, all West Hollywood successes: Steven Shaw, owner of a travel agency; Lorenzo "Dell" Delgado Espinoza, owner of a gardening service; and Sonny Cevathas, a New Age gold digger and owner of a body of death. The three met a year ago in the hospital where their lovers died. All three are antibody positive.

The humor is biting: when Steven Shaw cuts himself making a salad, bleeding on it, Dell Espinoza remarks, "You'll have to give me the recipe. HIV salad. Looks scrumptious."

Afterlife is a necessary book and I'm glad that Monette wrote it. We need stories to live by, fiction to help us cope. The three protagonists respond differently to AIDS. Sonny can't deal with AIDS: he avoids it, retreating into New Age platitudes. He deserts his roommate when Dirk gets ill. He ignores the lesion under his arm. To Monette's credit, Sonny doesn't come across as a vacuous one-dimensional stereotype.

Dell is overcome with anger. He turns into an urban terrorist, phoning in bomb threats to Mother Evangeline's church, telling the Department of Water and Power that he had poisoned the water supply with contaminated blood. His extreme activism pushes him over the edge into melodramatic tragedy.

Steven Shaw is at the center of the novel. Sonny crashes at his house; Dell hides out from the law there. Steven meets Mark Inman, a hard-boiled Hollywood executive as distant from his feelings as Alpha Centauri. It's the age-old subplot: fag meets fag; fag loses fag; fag gets fag.

Afterlife is a very gay book, chock full of vivid, explicit sex. Monette touches on many facets of life in the era of AIDS: the hysteria of finding a bruise and fearing it could be KS; the camaraderie of a diverse HIV support group; the difficulties of Thanksgiving dinners for extended gay families; religious fanatics; and a horrible death from AIDS. The coy, bitchy humor works for me, as in this scene from a support group meeting:

"Look, I'll be honest," said Andy. "I came here to get laid." The dumb laugh that erupted here was more like junior high, somewhere behind the boy's gym. "No, I'm serious. I thought this was going to be like a dating pool."

A bouffant queen with a murderous manicure, very Joan Crawford, stroked an eyebrow. "We call it a cesspool now, darling."

"I don't want to be with a guy who's not positive," continued Andy, ignoring the bitchy intrusion. "But he's gotta want to beat it as much as I do."

"Oh, you can beat it just as good yourself," drawled Miss Crawford, but no one laughed.

Yet there's something altogether too slick about Paul Monette's writing: the sheen is too polished, the artificial veneer too smooth. He tries too hard and it shows. Every paragraph has its ration of three forced metaphors. In his snappy rubberband prose, the rawness is missing, emotions buried under gloss. Monette is coy: AZT is never referred to by name, only as blue-and-white capsules. This bothered me the same way as when Susan Sontag never mentions AIDS by name in her story "The Way We Love Now": AIDS was the disease that dare not See AFTERLIFE on page 66

Conferring Opinions

by Sarah Pettit

Some of us have devoted many years of our lives to developing an audience to give our people something tangible to hope for, to help them identify as gay enough to want to read about themselves. Hope is what entices people to read, to see themselves reflected accurately and respectfully, to imagine participating in the world of culture and activity that reflects them as they actually are, that tells their story in the stream of all story.

—Judy Grahn, Keynote Speaker

With the zeal and expectation of pilgrims on their annual trek to Mecca, 1,000 gays and lesbians converged on San Francisco for the “OUT write ’90” conference. Held over the weekend of March 3rd and 4th, it ushered into existence

Odd Girls Out

Reading(s) is Fundamental: Getting Writers to

“OUT write ’90,” billed by the conference’s organizers as “the largest gathering of gay and lesbian authors in the history of the world," might have never lived up to that awesome claim had it not been for the support of local performance spaces, bookstores, galleries and friends who arranged for night after night of readings by the conference’s participating writers.

“Many of us just couldn’t afford to be here without the guarantee of a paying reading,” said New York poet David Trinidad. Trinidad was chosen by San Francisco Poetry Center director Robert Gluck to read with fellow New York poet Kenward Elmslie at the San Francisco Arts Commission Gallery. The Poetry Center readings are considered the most prestigious in the Bay Area by many writers.

Other writers, like New York poet and performer Eileen Myles, fit the “OUT write” conference into a larger West coast performance tour. Myles, whose Leaving New York was performed at New Langton Arts, an S.F. alternative arts space, was heading down to Los Angeles after the conference to do her show at Beyond Baroque Literary/Arts Center in Venice.

Readings were taking place all around the Bay Area in the days surrounding the weekend conference. Those done by New York writers proved to be the biggest draw. Sarah Schulman, on a multi-city tour promoting her latest novel, People in Trouble, packed them in at the Castro Street branch of A Different Light bookstore. Amazed at the number of gay men in the audience, Schulman paid special thanks to the guys in the crowded bookstore. New York poets Joan Larkin and Assotto Saint managed to pull a crowd across the bay to their mid-afternoon reading at the University of California at Berkeley campus.

An evening devoted to celebrating the work of Hispanic writers took place at the Mission Cultural Center and featured Francisco X. Alarcon, Cherrie Moraga, Rosa Maria Roffiel and Luis Maria Umpierre-Herrera. Another night of multi-cultural work featured L.A. writers Gilbert Daniel Cuadros, Ayo Fani, Jeanne Jacobs, Terry Wolverton and David Vernon at The Lab.

The big nights of the conference, however, were the IMPACT and COMPACT Benefits which framed the weekend’s events. Designed to present a representative sampling of the best of gay and lesbian writing, these events also raised funds for the “OUT write” Travel Fund. Without IMPACT and COMPACT, many of the conference’s writers might never have made it to San Francisco.

IMPACT, organized by City Lights editor Amy Scholder and Trash writer Dorothy Allison, took place on the Friday night before the conference at the Victoria Theater in the Mission district. The 500-seat theater was filled to capacity for the conference’s unofficial opening event.

Comprised of readings by Allison, Chryostos, Jewelle Gomez, Marilyn Hacker, Cherrie Moraga, Eileen Myles, Minnie Bruce Pratt, Sarah Schulman and Kitty Tsui, IMPACT started off the conference with a sense of unity and pride which prevailed throughout most of the weekend’s plenaries, workshops, readings and parties.

The outstanding readings at the IMPACT benefit were, for the most part, from the East Coast writers. New York poet Jewelle Gomez, whose last what will undoubtedly become the event of choice for gay and lesbian writers everywhere.

It is no coincidence that a decade that has seen the outgrowth of numerous gay and lesbian "institutions" (the Lambda Literary Awards, gay and lesbian studies centers, the Publishing Triangle and a handful of vital and growing publications to name a few) should culminate with such a massive, powerful and, ultimately, enormously stratified meeting of peoples. "OUT write," sponsored by the OUT/LOOK Foundation a.k.a. the OUT/LOOK Quarterly, did little to solve, solidify or arrange the many issues facing our community of gay and lesbian writers, yet it allowed for an invaluable assemblage of opinions and agendas. In a time when persistent and real threats continue against our writers and institutions, whether these threats are born in the sweaty palms of the Helms/NEA art police or in the not-yet-enlightened recesses of our own communities' racism, sexism, classism and idiocy, it cannot but help to have a moment for collective re-evaluation and recharging.

The scene was, admittedly, somewhat surreal. One must first picture San Francisco, a city of puzzling dimensions, and then envision a huge, carpeted, chandeliered downtown hotel packed to the gills with nearly every luminary in the gay and lesbian world of letters. Imagine a crowd that contained everyone from Ann Bannon to Pat Califia, from Harold Norse to Essex Hemphill, from Dorothy Allison to Sarah Schulman, from Sam Steward to Jewelle Gomez. It was a bookworm's wet dream. One also mentally noted who was not there and regretted their absence.

As with all large conferences, it was a near impossibility...
Charles Pierce has a problem. Reviews of his one-woman show recurrently read like doctoral dissertations. "The reviewers see something on stage that I don't see...they read things into what they see, more than they are." The scholarment, critical approach springs from Pierce's costuming choice and the critics' need to intellectualize such display. They are blinded by the sequin's glare.

Writing in Plays and Players, Charles Marowitz posits an explanation, "the spectacle of a man behaving like a woman for the amusement of a largely male audience indulging male adorations of female personalities is an enigma that goes beyond the hoop-and-haw of ordinary drama criticism." The hooping and hawing critics have springs from Pierce's costuming choice and the critics' need to intellectualize such display. They are blinded by the sequin's glare.

Yet Charles Pierce does not subscribe to Charles Peirce. Charles Pierce never skirts the main text of what it is that he does, "I am a stand-up comic in a dress with my jokes and doing my ladies." Pierce's notions are more La Cagean, "I Am What I Am," than Lacanian. Pierce deftly pieces Pierce and Peirce.

Pierce does, however, split linguistic hairs, be they human or acrylic, when attempting to label and separate his unique brand of performance. He does not consider himself a drag queen nor a female impersonator. Female impressionist or star impressionist are his phrases of choice. He explained to the New York Post, "You can call me an impersonator, an impressionist, a mimic or a comic in a dress. But not a drag queen! A drag queen is someone who dresses up and goes to a ball. I am an entertainer." Further teasing the issue with Anthony Slide, "Female impersonator or Femme Imp, if you prefer, to me applies to those men who dress up in gowns, makeup and wigs as their 'female persona' rather than impersonating a celebrity." Pierce also distinguishes his work from the photo-realistic impersonations of Jim Bailey's Judy Garland or Jimmy James' Marilyn Monroe. Pierce always cuts through his impressions allowing the audience to clearly see him underneath. His Eleanor Roosevelt tosses off a one-liner the lady herself would never have said "Franklin, if you can have a mistress, so can I."

Regardless of what you call it or how you perceive it, make no mistake that Pierce has been high healing it for quite some time. John F. Karr of the Bay Area Reporter writes that in the years since Pierce began performing "I've had time to finish high school, college and several careers, lose my hair, lose a decade, and look up to find a whole crowd of fresh young pups just finishing college, just loosing their hair, and just begging to take my job."

Pierce's nightclub and cabaret career began in 1954. While an actor at the Pasadena Playhouse, he was impressed by several night club acts. The young Pierce was so overwhelmed by the work of Arthur Blake that he wrote him a lengthy monologue entitled The Return of Norma Desmond. In the piece, Pierce has Desmond sent to prison and utter the line, "My prison suit was designed by Edith Head, my ball and chain by Cartier." His aplomb for the one-liner was surpassing. Though Blake liked the work, he felt it too long to be incorporated into his show. Pierce struck out on his own with it and met with success.

The next five years found Pierce performing in Miami Beach. At the time, crossdressing was illegal in Florida. Pierce was undaunted. Working in basic pantomime black, he employed a box of props to suggest his characters. In 1963 he began to work in a complete drag and his act crystallized into the form seen today.

Nearly 40 years later, Pierce's résumé is longer than any feather boa. His act has been seen throughout the United States at such venues as Carnegie Hall, Davies Symphony Hall and San Diego's Symphony Hall. In 1976 he appeared at London's Fortune Theatre. On television he has guest starred on Designing Women, Laverne and Shirley, Fame and innumerable talk shows. His 1982 performance at the Dorothy Chandler Music Center was broadcast on the Playboy Channel. He even boasts a line of greeting cards prominently featuring his characters. Most recently he appeared as Bertha Vanbation in the film version of Torch Song Trilogy.

Pierce has been graciously abdicating from the stage since 1982. "Oh tell me! There was the first farewell, the second farewell, and a third farewell and finally a retirement." He had hoped that after the release of Torch Song, movie and T.V. offers would cease his Sarah Bernhardt-esque string of goodbyes. Such has not been the case. "I thought maybe I'll just sit back now and won't pack a suitcase, won't do Bette Davis and just see what would happen with a movie or T.V. career. Thank you, no. There are too many actors out there. I went to a reading for Mr. Belvedere. Their part was a salesman in a lingerie shop. Well there were 15 guys there who all looked like lingerie salesman."

Back to the boards, though readily admitting to be "very tired of traveling around the country with suitcases, a lot of props and wardrobe." The carousel of legendary is spinning again ready to illicit shrieks and screams of laughter from its riders more likely to wake the dead than invoke them.

"My characters keep dying," Pierce told the Daily News. With the death of Bette Davis, the show is 100 percent all dead. Davis is Pierce's trademark. No performance would be complete without her. Though Davis herself never saw Pierce's impression, she did admit to The New York Times of having learned from the imitators. "You know, I've learned from the imitators. I really have. I was never conscious I moved my elbow like that until I saw someone doing me." Pierce bounces off this notion incorporating a new dong by Billy Barnes into his act entitled Doin' the Bette Davis.

As Pierce explains it, he as Bette sings the song explaining how it is that she is to be done. "You've gotta smoke like Bette. You've gotta walk like Bette. You've gotta talk like Bette. You've gotta act like Bette. You've gotta twitch like Bette. You've gotta cry like Bette." After each instructive phrase a demonstration is provided bolstering the edificatory nature of the song. The number has proved a show stopper in San Francisco and promises as much when Pierce arrives in New York.

The new show will also introduce (surprise!) more new material to the Pierce repertory. Tallulah Bankhead will stagger onto the Pierce stage for the first time. Pierce has frequently done vocal impressions of Bankhead but never realized her as a full character. The show also promises to exhume Mae West, and what Pierce calls the Turban Ladies—Maria Montez, Montezuma and Gloria Swanson. Bear in mind, though; "It's not a drag show—it moves right along." ▼

"You can feel it, it's Electric!"

A monthly consumer guide to new and not-to-be-missed music.

by William Chafin and Victoria Starr

Summer is rapidly approaching, calling for a hearty stock of music to move to. So whether you're bicycling with your walkman, playing frisbee on the beach, or simply tooling around town blasting music from your rolled-down car windows, be sure to put these albums at the top of your list.

Carousel/Marcia Griffiths/Mango

You'd naturally expect one of the three mothers of reggae to evoke images of sun, sand and some fine weed. Griffiths, who along with Judy Mowatt and Rita Marley backed Bob Marley for many years as the I-Threes, has been performing and recording, both as a solo artist and with others, since the early 1960s. On Carousel Griffiths references her long career, rolling soul, motown, rock and reggae into a fine blend of pure Pop.

The designated single on the album is "Electric Boogie", a Bunny Wailer tune first recorded by Griffiths in 1983, and the club mix of which inspired the "Electric Slide," a line dance that had Washington D.C. grooving for most of last year (no, that wasn't the Bus Stop the kids were doing last night!). But danceable songs are bountiful on this LP, with the title track, "Carousel," being one of the best. Its high-driving ska beat (the same beat that got Marley and friends their first recording contract with Island Records back in 1961) pumps this song along, while Griffiths' upper registers, the keyboards and the backing vocals—vocals reminiscent of African choral arrangements—are light enough to keep you flying. Better yet, throw on "Sugar Shack," which, on the heels of the B-52's "Love Shack" will be more than ample to keep the funkin' fun alive. The melody's even sillier than the B's, and the imagery more homey, with harmonica-induced train horns, and Griffith's singing echoed by a track that sounds like it came straight from Green Acres.

North American musical tradition shows its influence on "The One Who Really Loves You," whose intro could easily be mistaken for a remake of "Locomotion." It's a remarkable tribute to Motown; the lyrics, the vocals, the bridge, every aspect of the song points to the girl group era, and the sound (Aretha Franklin, Patti LaBelle) that shaped female vocalists for decades to come. Then there's the rock element in the cut "All over the World", and while it's slightly incongruous, it serves Griffiths' message loud and clear: "Some may rock, some may roll/Me say reggae, them say soul/In America they're rockin, and in Russia too/Down in Tokyo, round and round they go/All over the world people are dancing." A marvelous way to herald the coming of spring.

Salt and Tabasco, Dance Music Styles From Cuba, the Carribbean and Brazil/Mango

I'm so glad David Byrne discovered Latin Music. Just like I'm glad that Paul Simon discovered African music, and Christopher Columbus discovered America. "But," replied Chuck D., "how could Columbus discover America when he had a brother here waiting for him when he arrived?"

Actually I'm glad that Mango, an offshoot of Island
Records, is here to bring us all of the world's music. Not a hyped-up package, complete with gimmick, fashion and a film contract, but the real stuff, as smooth or quirky as it naturally evolves. Risks are taken at Mango, but the end result is always the finest music around. So why don't we hear Mango records on the airwaves?

Cheers to Nevin Patrick for this sizzling compilation. Whether you're a "world music" novice (the term "world music" continues to baffle me), or actually grew up with the local salseros and soca masters, this album is sure to hit a nerve, spanning the boys yell "Penis! Penis!" with gimmick, fashion and a mixed here, it's a catchy mm contract, but the real stuff, houselfockldance tune on the slow tempo side, filled with Beatlesesque flourish~s and Gregorian chant refrains.

Things heat up on the twisted B-side with "Rave On." This psychodelic-Acid-House funk includes guitar lines appropriated from the O'Jays, desultory whistling, buzzing bees, refrains of "you're a walking miracle," and, if you listen very carefully, near the end you'll hear the boys yell "Penis! Penis!" Very drug related, these songs are fun whatever your state of mind. And since Elektra is set to release a seven-track expanded version of Madchester, Happy Mondays will soon be easy to find here in the U.S.A.

Peter Murphy, the ex-lead singer of Bauhaus, keeps growing artistically. His roots, firmly planted in the dark and woody soil of goth-rock, nourish artistic endeavors which get stronger with every solo project. Deep (Beggars' Banquet), his third solo effort, is a superb, if moody, rock album built around acoustic guitars, synthesizers and a powerful percussion supplied by his band, The Hundred Men. This is Murphy's most accessible work yet, despite the fact that every song is riddled with enigmatic references to his own personal demons. In "Deep Ocean Sea," for example, we get "Your head's a supernova/And you would like/Anything to stop/fhe pain from your finger screaming/There you stand naked in the sun/Without leather, whose pain you think you need." The twisting and shifting continues with songs like "Cuts you up," "Seven Veils" and the ballad "Marlene Dietrich's Favorite Poem."

Electronic is the collaborative team of Bernard Sumner (New Order), Neil Tennant (Pet Shop Boys) and Johnny Marr, formerly of The Smiths. Their terrific new dance-pop hit, Getting Away With It is available in a few different re-mixed versions, but the original is still the best. Musically, the mesh of Pet Shop Boys and New Order reads very danceable, with a touch of elegance supplied by Marr's understated and underused guitar. The lyrics are sung by Bernard, while the refrain of "I love you more than you love me" becomes a duet with Neil. Are they singing to each other? Also included on the 12" is "Lucky Bag, Miami Edit," a happening instrumental bonus cut.

HE'S VERY DEEP
Peter Murphy solos out

If these last two disks seem a little too high-spirited, there's always the Brits to bring you back to urbanity, where muscles pump sleek to the industrial mind warp of sound...

If you know anything about Happy Mondays, this (yet another) band from Manchester, then you know they are Ecstasy boys, and it shows in their music. On Madchester Rave On (Factory, UK) there are two superior dance songs, beginning with "Hallelujah," originally produced by Martin Hannett. As lead singer Shaun Ryder reported in a recent interview in The Face, "Mind, he likes working with us 'cause we give him lots of 'E' during sessions, right!...During the 'Hallelujah' sessions we were giving him two a day." Remixed here, it's a catchy house/rock/dance tune on the slow tempo side, filled with Beatlesesque flourishes and Gregorian chant refrains.

speak its name.

Secondary characters are less well drawn. A Black woman included for proper demographics at the support group speaks dialect like "I got me chiren" that is jarring in context. It's unfortunate that Dell, the protagonist of Mexican origin, is the stereotypical gardener and the "hot-blooded" activist. A television star is mockingly presented as an imbecile of crass wealth (although his wife has an appealing vulnerability and refreshing warmth). Mark and Steven are snobs when it comes to material possessions. Even Sonny, ostensibly spiritual, mocks a prospective sugar daddy for his lack of taste in furnishings.

The story was lively and complex, quirky and interesting. Loose ends fell into place at the end, although some conclusions were too sitcom neat. And, I admit I have a bias against an author who lists novelizations of Nosferatu, Predator and other screenplays beneath novels, poems and nonfiction. Maybe Afterlife was too Hollywood slick for me. "Mark, even with ten days beard and nothing pending, tore at the wheel of his big boy's Jeep, negotiating traffic like a killer deal."

I'm sure that many readers will disagree with my reactions. Many will be caught up in the drama and events; many will identify with the characters more than I was able to. A well-known editor believes that writing about the AIDS crisis should not be judged by traditional literary standards: it is enough to testify, to remember, to mourn and missed. Lucas deals warmly with love audiences that lesbians and gays have Lighting designer Debra J. Kletter (who has worked on four other Lucas projects) creates a depth and variety of moods, from authentically garish club settings to warm candlelit dinners. Loy Arcenas' scenic design incorporates swift set changes amidst textured layers of faux stone, marble and tree roots that trail up a large picture frame, the contents of which change with each setting. Arcenas captures one of Lucas' larger themes: Perception of personality is an ever-shifting landscape, perhaps so transient that defining a soul may be impossible.

A sense of ensemble creativity surrounds this production. This is Lucas's third play to be produced at Circle Rep. Director René also directed the film of Lucas' screenplay Longtime Companion, about ten years in the lives of gay men and how AIDS affects their lives. Prelude actors Mary-Louise Parker and John Dossett appear in the award winning film, set to premiere in New York in May. Rumor has it that Prelude will be heading for a Broadway run, where it was originally intended. But the intimacy of Circle Rep's production shouldn't be missed. Lucas deals warmly with love and provides a magical, sexy tale of relationship problems and resolutions.

Hall demonstration in March of 1989 and Gay Pride Month last year. Like a Prayer is an in-depth look at ACT UP and WHAM's recent protest at St. Patrick's Cathedral. This tape reviews the Catholic Church's positions on homosexuality, AIDS and abortion, analyzes network coverage of the demonstration, and features footage inside of the church, including the infamous "wafer-crumbling" episode, when one activist protested church policy by dropping the Eucharist on the floor. An alternative to the dominant media's misinformed AIDS reporting, DIVA's efforts are crucial to educating audiences about the political ramifications of the AIDS crisis.

Also worth noting on this season's program are highlights from the International Women's Day Video Festival, including Laura Buckley's highly recommended pro-choice tape, Hear Our Voice; Ends & Means, which documents a recent conference on U.S. anti-communist efforts; and Anatomy of an Electronic Invasion, which investigates U.S. propaganda which is illegally broadcast onto Cuban airwaves.

plot twists and a most tender scene between Hughes and Baldwin. Although this is a story of a man and woman's love for each other, the gay undercurrent is apparent. Several background characters are portrayed as gay, and the theme of changing relationships applies easily to couples of any sex.

The plot reversals are complex, and it is in Act II that we see playwright Lucas' admitted influence from addresses by Judy Grahn and Allen Ginsberg and included two large forums, one on "AIDS and the Responsibility of the Writer" and one on "Gay and Lesbian Literature in the Marketplace." Grahn's speech was nothing short of brilliant, while the forums allowed for a broad and varied assignment of voices, highlighted by an intensely moving talk by Essex Hemphill in the former and an interesting range of opinion in the latter.

As could be predicted, the issue of race and diversity remained an open and inadequately addressed subject. Though variously treated, Hemphill may best have summed up the felt frustration in his talk on "coming home."

One could not, however, help being taken aback by the surging feeling of openness and tolerance that prevailed the two days. There was a constant emphasis on "coming out," and not merely in reference to sexuality; at the panel on self censorship, a range of writers talked about coming out around a host of issues and the need for tolerance within our community as well as in the world beyond. Most remarkable was the clarity, precision and accuracy of expression in this group of mostly fiction and poetry writers.

Numerous participants spoke of feeling spent and exhausted by the conference's end. "OUT write '90" was an energetic stab into the future and out of the past that we must hope will continue.

According to Wilson, the job was advertised in The New York Times, The Washington Post and The Boston Globe, but not in any gay and lesbian publications. The ads attracted 35 applicants, many of whom were straight, recalled Wilson. Of the 35, she said, "three bubbled up."

Among the three was Gary Henderson, a gay man who has served as acting executive director of the Fund during the search process. Henderson, who is a former editor and public-relations executive, said he was told that he was "number two" on the board's list. While Henderson was reluctant to comment on the board's choice, he stressed the importance of the negative "group reaction."

But Wilson asserted that the staff statement was an action taken by three maverick staff members, who did not enjoy the support of the remaining 13 staff and over 100 volunteer workers. Wilson contrasted this action with what she described as the "unanimous decision" of the board in favor of hiring Brading. According to Wilson, Brading not only got the votes of every director who attended the most recent board meeting, but also of all the other members of the board, who were polled prior to the meeting.

Board Not So Unanimous

At least one member of the board, David Hagens of Los Angeles, was never asked his opinion on Brading. Hagens, who stepped down as a co-chair of the board last summer, stated that he knew nothing about Brading, and had never seen the man's résumé. Hagens added, however, that he had been asked about his views on placing a heterosexual at the helm of the Fund, and had confessed deep ambivalence on the question. Hagens also expressed concern that supporters of the Fund may withhold future donations because of Brading.

Michael Paller, an employee of the Fund, was virtually certain that the organization would lose much of its support because of the board's decision. Paller was hired by the Fund to organize a gay and lesbian writers' conference, for which, Paller said, Brading's appointment constituted a major setback. "A number of writers who have agreed to participate may not participate," Paller warned. "Those I have spoken to are outraged.... It's a matter of the role, the symbolic significance of this."

Wilson, on the other hand, was more concerned with the symbolic significance of the staff statement. Repeatedly calling the statement libelous and defamatory, Wilson described it as "the same kind of bashing that we're constantly subjected to as lesbians and gay men."

Wilson and some members of the staff acknowledged that some of the tensions evident in the present conflict stemmed from the resignation of Sherrie Cohen three months ago. Cohen, who had served as the organization's executive director for three years, was asked to leave because of a "mismatch in terms of management and interpersonal skills," according to Wilson. While Wilson noted that "most of the staff left with [Cohen], she said she did not know exactly how many people had quit. But Turner described himself as "one of the two old-timers—people who have been here for over a year."

When the staff and volunteers released their statement on Tuesday, they asked for a meeting with the board to discuss Brading's offer. By the end of Thursday, Wilson stated, the board had not decided whether to grant the staff's request. Hagens was negotiating with both sides to arrange a meeting.

Meanwhile, the Fund personnel were making phone calls to gay and lesbian leaders around the country, in an effort to organize a letter-writing drive to pressure the board to reconsider Brading's job offer. Members of the staff declined to make predictions regarding the future of the negotiations, saying that they were handling the situation "day by day." Turner, however, ruled out the option of quitting. "Quitting is not in my vocabulary," he declared. "Striking—maybe—whatever means necessary to bring this organization to where it needs to be." —Filed from Boston.
